Council says no

 Mayor Tyner requested that under section 10 of the federal government will pay 50 percent of transportation to Lexington for medical reasons. Medical transportation is all we're planning to do," he further explained that vans from other counties would be headquartered in Carlisle, and that "we can travel more at a lower cost." He also asked Nicholas County Council for a donation toward transportation.
 He was told that all other in the Cheapsaw area must get their needs from Danville, or the project would be indefinitely funded.
 Barton asked the mayor to inform council members in the future of any important out-of-town meetings that council members can attend if possible. She was referring to a meeting about a police report on a wreck bar, city superintendent Gary Vandandingham and Attorney Ship Watson.
 Barton reported that he was called and told exactly who was wanted. When called by Barton there needed to be better communication between the mayor and council, Barton replied, "if you're as busy as I am, you'd see why I'd like to communicate."
 Barton said, "We're going to have to take time to communicate."
 In other business, council accepted an estimate of $238,000 for a new computer system in the city office. Service contract would be $100,000.

 Jim and Kathy Currell of Lower Jacksonburg Road in Carlisle, were honored as leaders in the farming community at a dinner held in Lexington.
 The Carlisle represented Nicholas County in the University of Kentucky and R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company series of leadership seminars for selected farm families.
 Mr. Shirley Phillips, assistant dean and associate director of the Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service, and the Carlisle were among of farm families from across the state selected to take part in the three-day series of seminars held March 3-5, in Lexington.
 "Success in agriculture increasingly depends upon rapid adoption of improved methods and materials. We are here at the university to provide research and training to our clients to help them keep up with the times," said Phillips.

we don't go broke saving money," Superintendent Vandandingham said. "The city would eliminate yearly fee. Council member Tyner said that. "All books will just right here in the office." Carl, who voted against the motion, said, "I just hope that property damage caused by they had been reported to Clark Tapp and Sharon Fainor, who are in charge of the city's League Spring Workshop April 23rd. Some people would be at the office, while they read the city office, while they read the city office, while they read the city office."
