COMMUNITY SPOTLIGHT

Center provides community service

By Chip Miller of the Carlisle Mercury staff
 Social problems plague each and every one of us daily. In fact, many would say it wouldn't be a normal routine if something didn't bother them about their life.

But to some people those problems can become severe, leading to depression or mental illness. This is where Nicholas County Comprehensive Care Center comes into action. The center is located downtown at the Carlisle Post Office.

"We deal with any social problem in the community with the individual or group through counseling or referral," said Keith Bragonier of the center.

"We are a valuable service to the community," he said. Bragonier said the center in Carlisle is only one of many in the state. He said they operate out of Franklin.

"We are a private non-profit organization," he said, adding the center isn't run by any state or federal department.

Bragonier said the center helps adults and children and offers individual, family and group counseling.

"Our programs consist primarily of outpatient counseling and referral services," he said.

He added the Care center operates in a seven-county region which includes Franklin, Woodford, Nicholas, Bourbon, Scott, Hartman and Anderson counties.

"Our staffing pattern now is to have one person in the office every day," he said of the Carlisle office.

Bragonier said two psychologists, three social workers and one psychiatrist are employed for the region.

"We deal with substance abuse, a lot of mental problems and child management problems," he said.

He said he thought the substance abuse problems seemed more prevalent.

He said just about all the staff at the center are "pretty well booked from day to day."

Bragonier said the center in Carlisle is a good community support.

"Word of mouth referrals help spread about our services," he said. There is an emergency phone number for service 24 hours a day, Bragonier said.

"This is for weekends or after hours if someone wants to reach anyone," he said.

The number is 1-400-373-9909.

BE THANKFUL FOR FAMILY AND FRIENDS!

Thanksgiving food precautions given

By Heather Mathes of the Carlisle Mercury staff
 As Thanksgiving draws near, Nicholas County's Home Extension Agent, Margie Wilson, provides helpful hints and safety tips for a relaxing Thanksgiving holiday.

Starting and handling food before and after the holiday dinner can be a dangerous subject if there is no guidance.

According to Fudko Maragone, Extension Home Economist for the University of Kentucky's College of Agriculture, turkey, dressing and gravy preparation areas not cleaned properly or leaving out of the refrigerator at room temperature for more than two hours provides the necessary conditions for rapid bacterial growth.

"After the meal is prepared cooling areas should be washed very thoroughly with hot, soapy water and dried. Stuffing should be taken directly out of the bird and kept in a warm oven, 200 degrees, or refrigerated. This will keep down the chances of food poisoning."
