New 3-in-1 deer tag proposed for next year

By News Staff

The Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources Commission, during its December meeting, will be considering a new three-in-one deer tag and bag limit change for the 1988 deer season.

According to the proposal prepared by John Phillips, deer program coordinator and Lutern Schaub, wildlife division director, the new system would consist of three deer tags to be purchased as one package by the hunter.

Single deer tags would no longer be available, except as a "youth tag" for hunters under 16 years old.

The three permits would allow hunters to harvest one deer of either sex, one antlered deer and one antlerless deer, but some regulations would still dictate the number, method, and sex of deer which may be taken in any given area or county.

The cost of the three tag package has yet to be determined, but the increase would be modest—perhaps $12.00 for the three tags. The current price for a deer tag is $11.00.

Kentucky's growing deer population has necessitated some changes in harvest management strategies, especially in the western and northwestern portions of the state.

Statistics show that Kentucky's deer herd is growing at a rate of 28 percent each year and also that there are not enough hunters in some areas to effectively control increasing deer numbers.

One problem that has arisen in managing the deer herd is that hunters in areas with higher deer populations are reluctant to harvest does. With the increased availability of deer, more hunters have turned to trophy hunting or strictly buck hunting.

As a result, not enough does are being harvested and reports of crop devastation have increased, even with the increased amount of either sex hunting permitted over the last few years.

A deer tag that allows for the taking of up to three deer, under certain conditions, is an incentive to harvest a second or third animal. In addition, the three tag system gives hunters the option to harvest a doe and still be able to buck hunt.

Zone regulations would direct the hunting pressure to those areas that need a larger reduction of does, while maximizing the use of the open herd in all areas.

Recognized drawback of the proposed system is that hunters living in the zones that permit antlered deer only hunting would have to travel to other counties to fill their deer tag.

However, hunters would be able to harvest two antlered deer with a gun, whereas previously only one antlered deer could be taken.

"We feel this is a necessary step to effectively manage and maximize the value of our growing deer herd," said Schaub.

Our research indicates that while the herd could safely accommodate a higher reduction of bucks, we are more in need of developing a system that will encourage hunters to harvest does," and Schaub. "This system would give us the flexibility in providing quality deer hunting opportunities in Kentucky," Schaub added.

Purina Preconditioning Receiving Chow — it's good business

Turn 21-day trouble periods into 21-day moneymaking opportunities

Purina Preconditioning Receiving Chow pays big on newly weaned calves. It not only combats stress, disease and death loss, but tests show average gains of 2.5 to 3.0 pounds per head per day—an extra 50 to 60 pounds in three weeks.

Feed Purina P/R Chow for 21 to 28 days after weaning or shipping.

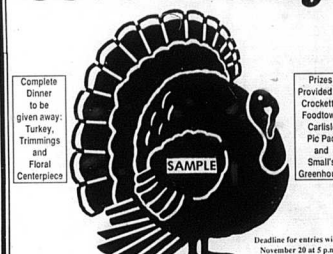

Feeding instructions

1. House them right in small pens with windbreaks.
2. Hay the first day. Let calves fill up on quality grass hay the first day. Then remove it.
3. Plenty of water. Keep fresh, clean water handy.
4. Free-choice feed. Start Purina P/R ration the second day, continue for 28 days.
5. Follow a solid health program.
