Tradition continues

Keeping a family tradition alive and strong

Jeff Jones, and his father Fred, collected Case tractors, belts, just about anything that had the word Case on it.

The Joneses had one of largest collections of Case tractors in the world.

After Fred Jones died, the family had to sell quite a bit of the collection, to pay medical, and funeral expenses.

Jeff said, "I plan on building the collection back up."

Jones has two other businesses beside his Case business.

An excavating and trucking business, provide Jones' primary jobs.

"Building ponds, soil conservation, are among several of the type of jobs I do," Jones added.

"The trucking business I do on the side, I'd rather be bulldozing, but it's a dollar," Jones continued.

Jones and his wife Minnie, travel together when he has to go out on the road.

The Joneses have three children, Jessica, Sam, and Brad.

Jones said, "I want my son's to have something when I'm gone, and that is why I want to build my Case selection back up."

Jessica has other plans, she added,"I would like to learn to operate the bulldozer, but I don't want any part of the business."

At one time, Jones' said his collection was up to 150 case pieces, now he has around 20.

Any one wanting information about a Case tractor, can certainly ask Jones.

The Jones home contains, pictures, case watches, logos, you name it, it probably is there

Jones said, "Over a period of years, my dad and bought and wore out sixty-five case bulldozers."

Although the case tractors, are the Joneses' first love. He said, "We have a large family, and I have to take care of them. My mother, brother, and sister live with us also."

Jones added,"I am in the process now of making a mud sling back on the property, and later putting in a place for tractor pulls."

Jones has 25 trophies for winning in tractor pulls.

Jones added one last saying, "The difficult we do immediately, and the impossible takes a little longer."

Farming is a way of life for Malcolm and Francis; The Hardwicks

Farming has always been a way a life for the Hardwick family.

Malcolm and his wife Francis, both grew up on farms.

Married December 18, 1948, Hardwick's father purchased the 220 acre farm, and the Hardwicks and their son Pat, farm it.

Mrs. Hardwick said, "My husband and son farm on other peoples' farms as well as this one."

She added, "The future does not look too good for young people wanting to farm now, unless they have someone helping them."

The Hardwicks raise tobacco, corn, and cattle. Mrs. Hardwick added, "We have a pretty good tobacco crop this year, we have been fortunate."

Her pride and joy comes from gardening. She raised potatoes, beans, tomatoes, and lots other vegetables.

Some she freezes, some she cans. But she assures everyone, they will be good.

Mrs. Hardwick said she has not always stayed at home gardening. She worked for the Bluegrass Army Depot for 11 years, working on the line, up to data processing.

The Hardwicks have one daughter, Phylisa, who is married and lives in Carlisle. Their son Pat, lives with his wife Lisa, in a house next door to them.

"Pat had several chances for other jobs, but he wanted to farm with his father," added Mrs. Hardwick.

"The father and son team is very fond of one another, but like everyone, they have their disagreements," Hardwick added.

She added she is not too concerned about the cigarette ban that is popping up everywhere.

"I think it was' Larry Hopkins who said, 'People should have the right to decide whether they want to smoke or not,' and I agree with that," Hardwick said.

The Hardwicks have two animals that are not for sale. Prissy and Bozo, mother and daughter collies.

Mrs. Hardwick said, "I don't think they would bite anyone, but if we are gone, and someone comes around, they are taking a chance.

"Farming requires long hours, sometimes no vacations, and mostly a lot of praying," added Mrs.Hardwick.

"The weather has been so dry this year, but I believe there' are other counties, that are worse off than us," she continued.

Mrs. Hardwick said she found out the other day, the staircase in her home was built in 1867. "I knew our home was old, but I never thought it was an 18th century home," she added.

When the Hardwicks moved in, they built on the bathroom and a family room. Pat and Mrs. Hardwick painted and papered the rest.

"When my husband comes in at night, ' e relaxes either in his chair, or in bed, watching television. Usually he falls asleep," Mrs. Hardwick said.

"We get up at 6 a.m. and we go to bed early. We all work long and hard hours," she added.

But the family has planned a few days in October to get away in Gatlinburg. "That is hard to plan, because someone has to be here all the time," Mrs. Hardwick concluded.

Literacy Council seeking tutors

People who want to learn to read need your help. Each person who is courageous enough to admit he can't read needs a tutor to help him learn.

Students come to the program because they want to be able to fill out a job application, read the label on a medicine bottle, or help their children with homework.

Other students enroll who want to raise their reading level so they can be promoted in their jobs.

Still others want to read fluently enough to enter the GED program.

Each of these people needs a tutor and the Nicholas County Adult Reading Project has more people who want to enter the program than it has people to teach them.

On November 6-7, Nicholas County and Bourbon County are sponsoring a training session to train tutors in Paris.

Before one can teach, one must have a minimum of eleven hours training.

These sessions will offer this training. If you would like to make a big difference in someone's life, please call the Board of Education, 289-2264, or Helen Hamilton, Coordinator, 289-7504.

Also, tutors who have some training are invited to attend these sessions since a team of highly qualified instructors will be conducting these sessions.

Currently 17 students are enrolled in the Nicholas County Reading Program.

These adults are anxious to make up for lost time and are hard working students. Yet these seven teen represent one hundredth of the citizens of Nicholas County who can benefit from the program.

According to the 1980 census, 1700 people in Nicholas County over the age of 25 have completed the 8th grade or less.

Many of these people would profit by up-grading their reading skills.

Tutors are rewarded by seeing the results of their efforts in their students' progress from week to week. Nicholas County tutor said her student had become one of her best friends.

A distinguished Maysville lady said, after fifty years of professional and volunteer work, she found tutoring the most rewarding job she had ever had.

Applications accepted

Applications for the first of three periods in the 1987-88 Kentucky Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP) will be taken statewide beginning October 19.

However, officials of the administering state agency warn that delays in Congressional action threaten lengthy waits for approval assistance and a Senate proposal to cut funds by 32 percent could mean possible cancellation of the general application period in November.

HEAP is a federally funded program which helps low-income families pay the cost of electricity, gas, wood, coal, bottled gas or other heating fuels during the winter months. No state funds are available to operate the program.

Last year, the state Department for Social Insurance approved more than $16.6 million in payments to 149,125 Kentucky households.

"Right now, we have a schedule but no firm indication from Washington as to just what Kentucky's share of the HEAP funding pot will be," said Social Insurance Commissioner Mike Robinson.

"Because we want to have the application period for elderly and disabled people prior to the onset of colder weather, we can't just hold up the application process, waiting for an exact dollar amount.

"Our plan is to accept and review the elderly and disabled applications, act on approved applications with the funding authorized by planned phases in the bill and decide if there are sufficient funds to proceed with a regular application period in November or hold the remaining funds for the crisis component."

Starting October 19, households with a family member who is 60 or older or is 100 percent disabled may request financial aid for winter heating bills.

The segment runs through October 30 or until the allotted federal funds are exhausted.

Depending on how and when Congress acts, the second or "subsidy" phase for all other low-income families to apply for benefits is scheduled to begin November 16 and lasts until December 30.

The final or "crisis" phase runs January 11 through April 29.

Applications for the first two segments of this year's program will be taken at county offices of the Department for Social Insurance and at a specific location announced locally by the office.

As in the past, applications for the crisis portion of the program will be taken by the state's 24 community action agencies.

From January 11 through April 29, any eligible household without heat, facing the loss of heat within seven days, facing disconnection by a utility or needing heating system repairs may apply for benefits.
