Social Security

If you work in Social Security covered employment, or self-employment you should occasionally check to see that your earnings have been credited under your name and Social Security number.

At the Social Security Administration, we keep individual records of earnings for life, and we can provide everybody who asks for it with a statement of his or her earnings.

People, especially those who change jobs often, should check their records about every 3 years. This is the best way to be sure that the employers have reported their employees' earnings correctly.

It is very easy to get a Statement of Earnings. All you have to do is ask for a Form 7000-P (Request for Statement of Earnings) at any Social Security office.
