N.C. teacher promotes Special Olympics

Event held first week in June

By Heather Mathas
of the Carlisle Mercury

Lettie O'Bannon, Special Education teacher at Nicholas County Elementary School and coordinator of Nicholas County participation in the Special Olympics, attended a county management team seminar at Faith Baptist Church in Georgetown on January 26.

The meeting concerned events taking place at the Special Olympics held during the first week in June at Eastern Kentucky University in Richmond.

O'Bannon said, "Special Education teachers and those involved in Special Olympics discussed an organization of people who are working with us to help promote Special Olympics."

Those people would be county director manager, county book keeper, medical committee, county training director, transportation, fundraising committee and family representative.

All would work on a strictly volunteer basis.

The group would be residents of Nicholas County who have given help to Special Olympics in the past and continue to offer help in the future.

"The chapter office is also planning to develop a county family name to keep families of Special Olympics informed on events coming up and on family matters," concluded O'Bannon.

For future activities, O'Bannon and some of her students plan to attend a training session on teaching Special Olympics to roller skis.

Club Plans after high school: attend Morehead, major in business

"Much improved attendance over last year, hard work and dedication that has paid off, not only in school work and improvement of grades, but in extracurricular activities as well," wrote one NCHS faculty member.

Name: Michelle Gray
Age: 16
Grade: junior
Parents: John and Carol Ring
Extracurricular activities: Cheerleading, track, FHA, Pep

Both individuals and teams earn points for their school based on the respective order of finish in each category of competition.

"A state champion is crowned annually in both the middle school and high school divisions, as well as individual champions in the competition events," Guthrie concluded.

The public is invited to attend the quick recall competition which will begin at 11:45 a.m.
