Cost-sharing program available to state farmers

Many Kentucky farmers would benefit from the Agricultural Conservation Program which currently is holding a registration period, says a Kentucky Department of Agriculture official.

"I suspect fewer than 10 percent of our farmers know of and fully understand the program and its potential," said Richard E. Phillips, the department's market research director.

"Farmers were notified of the program by a number of local ASCS offices, but the notice read 'SLs Permanent Vegetative Cover Establishment'. Unless the farmer inquired further, that was all the notification he or she got. I really question just how many farmers read that notice and understood what it meant. In any event, a lot of farmers are missing out on a good program, especially in light of the drive to raise the amount of alfalfa and other legumes grown in Kentucky."

Phillips said most counties are now having their spring signup for seeding practices, and request for cost-sharing can be accepted only during that period.

ASCS can pay up to 75 percent of the cost of seeding, but the percentage is set by local county committees.

Alfalfa must be sown with a grass and cannot be mixed with other legumes.

Also, the acreage seeded must be protected from grazing by domestic livestock until the stand is well established, but the cover can eventually be grazed, according to the state ASCS office.

The purpose of the permanent vegetative cover is to protect the soil and reduce water, air or land pollution from agricultural or silvicultural non-point sources on farmland or ranchland that is subject to wind or water erosion.

Farmers also could be eligible for cost-sharing for minimum plant food materials, seed, and seedbed preparation. Those interested should contact their local ASCS office, Phillips said.

Ky. agriculture prices fluctuate

Prices received by Kentucky farmers for grain and livestock were mostly higher at mid-December. Beef cattle, with a mid-December price of $56.60, were 90 cents higher than the November average of $55.70 and $11.90 higher than December 1986.

Cows showed the largest increase, up $1.10 to $42.70 at mid-December, while steers and heifers were up 50 cents from the November average of $66.50.

Calves, with a mid-December average of $76.70, were 60 cents higher than November and $20.50 higher than the December 1986 price of $56.20.

Hog prices were mostly higher while sows were showing a decline at mid-December.

The all hog mid-December price of $41.40 was 40 cents higher than November, but was $9.80 lower than a year ago.

Sows, with a mid-December price of $30.80, were $4.30 below the November average of $35.00.

Grain prices received by farmers at mid-December were higher than the November 1987 and December 1986 averages.

Corn, with a mid-December price of $1.95, was 11 cents higher than the November average of $1.84 and 19 cents above last year.

Soybeans were 46 cents higher to a mid-December price of $5.82 and were 99 cents higher than the December 1986 price of $4.83.

Wheat, with a mid-December price of $2.6[illegible] was 22 cents higher than November and 12 cents higher than a year ago.

Agriculture Commissioner Ed. Ali Farm Products Index of Prices Received by Farmers decreased 4 points (3.0 percent) from November to 128 percent of its January-December 1977 average. The Index was 8 points (6.7 percent) above a year ago.

NOTICE

The Nicholas County School District has recently prepared an application for the use of federal funds for the education of pre-school handicapped children in the Nicholas County School District.

Public Law 99-457 provides priorities for the education of children. First priority is given to children who are not being given any educational services. It also requires that the school district plan for the implementation of identification, location, evaluation, and provision of educational placement of all preschool handicapped children.

Guaranteed procedural safeguards for handicapped children and their parents in decisions regarding educational placement and confidentiality of files of those children identified as being handicapped will be instituted.

Any interested persons may review copies of the application and make comments concerning the application to Donald Elder of the Nicholas County School District.

A Sporting View

As the snows of winter continue to drift across our lives, what better time than now to ponder one of America's great joys? A day at the ball park.

Sunny days and soft nights. Hot dogs and cold beverages. Close calls and great plays and lots of time between pitches to debate life's mysteries with one's neighbors. A day at the ball park is one of life's sweetest pleasures.

There are only 21 major league markets in the United States. That means most Americans depend upon television for most of their baseball.

But baseball doesn't televise well. You have to be there. And in 1987, 20 million Americans enjoyed their baseball experiences at 150 minor league parks throughout the country.

When we think of minor league baseball, we think of old dimly lit parks with cozy, intimate, splintery wooden grandstands and murderous, rocky infields. But over the past decade much of that has changed.

Minor league parks today are glittering showcases to watch a ballgame in, and the reason for this lies in the hearts of men like Larry Schmittou.

In 1978, Larry Schmittou created the Nashville Sounds. A lifelong resident of middle Tennessee, he is a baseball nut who achieved success as a baseball coach at Vanderbilt University.

Schmittou points to the Louisville team in the AAA American Association—the league in which the Sounds now play—as being the greatest success story of the minors.

In 1982 A. Ray Smith moved his franchise from Springfield, Illinois to Louisville and the following year the Redbirds became the first team in minor league history to draw more than—or anywhere close to—a million fans.

The story is especially amazing when you consider that both the St. Louis Cardinals and the Cincinnati Reds are within reasonable driving distance of Louisville.

"They put about $5-million into the park," says Schmittou, "and feasibility studies and additional million for other improvements. They received tremendous support from the citizens, especially Dan Ulmer the banker who influenced Smith to move the team.

"So, Columbus did it. We did it. Louisville did it. And making minority that had experienced no professional baseball since the Nashville Vols failed in every way more than a decade before.

From opening day of 1978 the Sounds had such a financial success that baseball owners in other towns ran to come to town profitable teams in Greensboro and Huntsville, as well as a promising new operation in Wichita.

They are in the middle of the stadium's fourth expansion, with eventual plans for expanding the park to big league size—should the need arise.

"In building the Sounds," says Schmittou, "I didn't do a single thing that was original. I followed the lead of people like Harold Cooper of Columbus, Ohio. He brought a professional touch to selling the public on minor league baseball that had been lacking."
