Dunn explores future in space camp

Brian Dunn of Carlisle, explored the future of space travel by participating in advanced training activities at United States Space Camp. More than 16,000 youngsters from all 50 states and around the world will participate in Space Camp programs this year, building and launching model rockets, experiencing astronaut training simulators, and participating in simulated missions using Space Camp's Space Shuttle and mission control mockups.

Open to youngsters in grades four through seven, Space Camp introduces trainees to the history of space exploration during tours of The Space and Rocket Center and NASA's Marshall Flight Center. They also see into the future of the space program by visiting NASA's Space Station as it is being built in orbit. The highlight of the five-day program is a simulated mission using Space Shuttle and mission control mockups built specially for Space Camp. Trainees in teams of twelve take roles in the orbiter and in mission control throughout the mission, from launch, through experiments in orbit, to landing.

The pilot and commander use computers to "fly" the orbiter. They communicate with trainees in mission control to solve problems that arise during the flight, while other trainees put on space suit mockups for simulated space walk activities in the orbiter's bay window. Space Camp programs are designed to encourage young people to study math, science, and high technology by giving them a hands-on introduction to related fields in space science.

A guided tour of the rocket park, which astronaut John Glenn calls "the most complete in the world" - identifies the rules of each rocket in the advanced program. Most of the rockets were engineered and tested at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center or the United States Army's Redstone Arsenal.

Astronauts train for many weeks before their first flight. Space Camp trainees are involved in a variety of specific astronaut training activities, from packaged food and waste management systems to life support systems for living in space. They try on space suits and helmets, and study actual Mercury and Apollo spacecraft that flew in space.

A highlight of the week puts youngsters in the role of astronauts preparing for space walks and coping with the zero gravity of space. They practice in the Moon Walk Trainer, which simulates the sensation of walking on the moon, where body weight is one-sixth that of Earth. They also experience the sensation of 3 to 4 G's or triple normal body weight - during launch in the Lunar Orbiter, and rendezvous with an orbiting space station aboard the Shuttle Space Line.

A behind-the-scenes tour of NASA's neutral buoyancy tank - a 1.6 million-gallon water tank where astronauts have trained, prepares them for an underwater task involving simulated space walk activities. Family members are invited to graduation ceremonies on Friday, where each trainee receives Space Camp wings, a certificate, and a group photo. Special team awards are presented, concluding an exciting week.

Other Space Camp programs include United States Space Academy Level 1 for young people in grades seven through ten, Space Academy Level II for high school juniors and seniors, and college freshmen. Adult Space Academy Level I for young people in grades seven through ten, Space Academy Level II for high school juniors and seniors, and college freshmen.
