DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION

THE KENTUCKY PERSPECTIVE

With Mark R. Cheigren

BY Mark R. Cheigren
ATLANTA (AP) - Here are notes and quotes from and out of the Kentucky delegation to the Democratic National Convention.

Being a "weenie" has become something of a status symbol among some Kentucky delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

The term was applied by Danny Brinson, former state party chairman and now a member of the Democratic National Committee.

It was prompted by a report of delegates between Brinson and state Sen. David Karpman of Louisville, the Dukakis primary campaign chairman.

Brinson, a supporter of Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., who was most of the delegation in the March primary, said Karpman and "his weenie" had nothing to do with anything.

Terry Peabody of Louisville, a Karpman confidante and early Dukakis supporter, arranged to have the buttons made. "We made up a variety of top with different designs," Peabody said. Gov. Wallace Wilkinson, who was a Core leader, even kidded Karpman about the buttons.

Karpman offered Wilkinson a button as an honorarium, but Wilkinson said he doubted he would wear it.

"I'll keep it as a memento," Wilkinson said. Members of the Kentucky delegation to the Democratic National Convention are having their activities recorded on film.

A photographer from a Kentucky studio was retained to travel with the delegates and alternate, snapping photos of everything interesting and most things that are not.

In addition to a staged group photo on Monday, the photographer attended most of the receptions, taking pictures of all most everything.

Those attending will be able to see the activities being taped at the Omni facility to generate a great deal of enthusiasm among the Kentuckians present.

Monday evening's opening activities at the convention hall at the Omni failed to generate a great deal of enthusiasm among the Kentuckians present.

"People are beginning to say, 'Hey, you might get lucky,'" Patton said.
