Project preserves history

By Heather Mathes
Of The Carlisle Mercury Staff
Nicholas County's history is being preserved for inquiry generation to follow.
How, you may?
Some time ago, the Nicholas County Historical Society began a project involving the Kentucky Heritage Council in order to preserve the heritage of this county.
The project is now moving into overdrive, as a historical preservation consultant arrived in Carlisle on Thursday, July 14.
Donna Neary, a native of Kentucky and a graduate of Murray State University in 1984, is researching the structures of this county in order to determine changes brought about over time.
Neary said, "I will be using photos, maps of the town around the turn of the century or even those made in the 30's or 40's to determine when and what changes Nicholas County has undergone."
From what source will the information come?
"I will be taking oral histories about what people remember of the buildings, and any changes structures might have undergone. I can also use any photos, maps or even blueprints citizens might have that would provide any information," Neary said.
What was the first thing Neary thought when she saw our town and appreciated its historical value?
Neary said, "I saw the pride the people of this town took in their buildings and how original everything looked and how carefully it was all planned."
"Many would not believe how some towns just tear down whole building fronts and put back these aluminum type structures, that have no aesthetic value what-so-ever, this is not the case here."
According to Jo Lynn Garrett, project director, one of the purposes of the undertaking is a re-surveying.
Garrett said, "Camille Wells surveyed the area in question in 1880 and, now Donna will be going back and re-surveying to update and add any changes to the original."
She continued, "The goal of this project is to ready information for a National Register of Historic Places Nomination so Carlisle and much of Nicholas County will be listed as a historical district."
Many in Nicholas County will see Neary out in Carlisle and beyond taking pictures of property or structures.
Garrett said, "This is not an assessment of personal property for any kind of tax purposes, but strictly for historical documentation of resources in Carlisle."
According to both, preserving the heritage of Nicholas County does not just involve the structures but as a way to preserve the heritage of the people in Nicholas County as well.
"When you have lived here for all your life and see the towns and structures out in the county you know them for the drug store or a dress shop. I look at them and see the mechanical part of the beautiful buildings with almost all the original work."
That's good people that remember all about those buildings and information that can not be got from anyone but the older people who really know their home," Neary concluded.
The project does need help. Neary and Garrett will accept any volunteer help that can be offered.
They will also accept any donations, "no matter how small, all will be helpful."
