GLAUCOMA

Acute glaucoma is not a major cause of vision loss in the United States. Because this type of glaucoma attacks suddenly, accompanied by pain, headaches and often visual "halos," and reduces vision rapidly, it usually receives quick medical attention.

But chronic glaucoma, which is the leading cause of blindness in the nation, sneaks up on you. there is no pain, and central vision usually remains clear. Yet the vision loss sustained by the patient can be severe and irreversible. This loss of vision starts with the loss of peripheral vision and then progresses to the loss of central vision.

Picked up early, chronic glaucoma is controllable. And the best way to check is through routine eye examinations that include special glaucoma testing. Adults over 35 should have this glaucoma test annually, especially if there is any history of glaucoma in the family.
