Lottery highlights television debate; projections given

HAZARD, Ky. (AP)– A state representative paid during a televised debate that a lottery could conservatively generate between $50 million to $55 million annually for state projects, while a minister countered that most lotteries never achieve the amount of revenue expected.

Rep. Greg Stumbo, D-Prestonsburg, and the Rev. Richard Held, minister of the First United Methodist Church in Middlesboro, took opposing sides on the proposed state lottery during a 30-minute broadcast from the WYMT-TV studios Thursday night.

Stumbo said his work on the state Lottery Commission, formed by Gov. Wallace Wilkinson to work out specifics of a lottery, persuaded him that a game would be good for Kentuckians.

He said proceeds from a state lottery could go for such projects as education, the elderly and bonuses for Vietnam veterans.

And he noted that Kentuckians already are buying tickets from adjacent states that have lotteries.

Twenty-eight states currently have lotteries, including Kentucky's neighbors West Virginia, Ohio, Virginia, Missouri and Illinois.
