 BE A SMART CONTACT LENS WEARER
 A smart contact lens wearer knows when to remove the lenses to avoid eye problems. And it's easy to be smart if you use common sense and recognize the basic symptoms of overwear or irritation.
 Of course, you should always remove your lenses when you have worn them for a longer period of time than your optometrist recommends. Should a foreign body enter your eye, remove the lens and do not reinsert it until you are sure the particle is out of your eye and off the lens.
 Common symptoms associated with overwear or irritation are:
 * Eyes tear for no apparent reason.
 * Eyes burn or feel generally irritated.
 * Vision suddenly appears blurry.
 * Excessive blinking.
 * Redness.
 Should any of these symptoms occur, remove your contacts. When they clear up, clean and sterilize your lenses and reinsert them. If symptoms recur, remove lenses immediately and call your optometrist.
