To help cut down on intake of fats

Healthy summer meal tips

By Mary Macvean
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Even if you pay attention to dietary recommendations, it's often hard to translate them to the shopping cart or the dinner table.

Much of the advice these days focuses on fat and on the many diseases associated with eating too much of it. So it makes sense to learn what foods contain lots of it and steer clear of them.

The National Dairy Council recently introduced a plan it calls "Healthy Dividends" to help people do that. Based on height, sex and weight, a person sets a fat "budget" that must be lived within to maintain weight.

For example, a 30-year-old man who weighs 170 pounds would be budgeted for 65 grams of fat a day; a 30-year-old woman who weighs 135 pounds would be budgeted for 75 grams.

To lose weight, adjust the budget. It's an alternative to calorie counting.

"You balance fat just as you do your checkbook," says Anita Owen, senior vice president of the Dairy Council's nutrition education and research.

Of course, portions count, too. Even foods with no fat content to be eaten with total abandon. But a gram of fat has about twice the calories (9) as a gram of protein or carbohydrate.

Current dietary recommendations are for diets with no more than 30 percent of calories from fat, with 10 percent or less from saturated fats. But surveys by the U.S. Department of Agriculture show that adult women get an average 37 percent of their calories from fat, 13 percent from saturated fats, and that adult men get 36 percent of their calories from fat, with 14 percent saturated.

Many people are confused about dietary advice, says Nancy Wellman, president of the American Dietetic Association. "The key to healthy eating is balance, variety and moderation."

Anyone can do this without a special program; it just takes work to figure it all out. "Healthy Dividends" may help some people learn how to eat and stay healthy. And most specialists say exercise is just as important as the foods that are eaten.

Under a fat budget, no food is forbidden so long as the total intake of fat doesn't exceed what's budgeted. So, a person can plan for a steak or a dish of ice cream by making up for them with low-fat foods the rest of the day.

"You can have your cake and eat it too if you budget the total amount of fat within your meals all diet," says Doris Derelian, a behavior specialist who helped develop the program.

The following recipe is provided by the National Dairy Council.

BROILED SALMON STEAK WITH CITRUS BUTTER

1 1/2 pounds salmon steaks
1 tablespoon butter, melted
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon ground black pepper
Citrus Butter (recipe follows)
2 cups mixed salad greens

Arrange salmon steaks in a hot, lightly oiled broiler pan; brush both sides with melted butter; sprinkle with salt and black pepper. Broil 3 to 4 inches from heat until fish is firm but still moist, about 4 minutes per side. Top each portion with 1 slice Citrus Butter; broil until butter just begins to melt, about 30 seconds. Serve over salad greens; garnish with lemon, lime and orange slices, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

CITRUS BUTTER

2 tablespoons finely chopped grapefruit
1 tablespoon finely chopped orange
1 tablespoon finely chopped lemon
1 tablespoon finely chopped lime
1/4 cup (1/2 stick) butter, softened
2 teaspoons chopped fresh tarragon leaves or 1/2 teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed
1/2 teaspoon grated fresh ginger
1/4 teaspoon salt
Dash ground black pepper

Finely grate fruit; orange, lemon and lime in a fine strainer; drain well; discard juice. In a small mixing bowl place butter, tarragon, ginger, salt and black pepper; beat with an electric mixer until fluffy.

Stir in fruit pulp; drain off any juice that doesn't incorporate into the butter. On a sheet of plastic wrap shape butter into a 2-inch log; cover with plastic wrap. Refrigerate until firm, 1 to 2 hours. Cut into 4 slices. Makes 4 servings, about 1-3rd cup.

Nutrition information per serving, including Citrus Butter: 380 cal., 38 g fat.

Baptist editors call meeting after leak of committee's work

CHARLOTTE (AP) - Editors of Baptist state newspapers across the country have called an emergency meeting to discuss alternatives to Baptist Press, the news service under fire from fundamentalists in Southern Baptist Convention.

The meeting, to be held in Dallas Friday, was arranged late last week after a flurry of orders to oust Baptist Press director Al Shackleford and news editor Dan Martin leaked to the secular press.

News of the June 13 decision by officers of the SBC's powerful Executive Committee infuriated moderate Southern Baptists and prompted talk about new ways to circulate information about the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

"We're not going into Dallas with any blueprint for what happens next," the Rev. Gene Puckett of Raleigh, editor of the Biblical Recorder, journal of the N.C. Baptist State Convention, told The Charlotte Observer.

"But we will be exploring other options. Among editors I've talked with, no one has any confidence in the kind of news service that will replace the one we have now."

State editors, whose papers reach 1.8 million readers in North Carolina and South Carolina and 36 other states, including Kentucky, have depended on Nashville-based Baptist Press since its founding in 1947.

Widely regarded as the most open and objective denomination-wide news service in the country, Baptist Press operates bureaus in Atlanta, Dallas, Nashville, Richmond and Washington. It distributes news and feature stories to 400 religious and secular news outlets.

The six Executive Committee officers withheld comment until chairman Sam Pace of Lawton, Okla., responded angrily last Friday, charging that the Baptist Press story cast the officers in a unfair light.
