Guard fires up Hidden Valley

By Josh Wiegman
The Carlisle Mercury Staff
Since the early morning Saturday the sky threatened rain, but weather conditions were the last thing on the minds of nearly 100 National Guardsmen setting up post and perimeter at their training grounds in Hidden Valley.

For a general gathering of the Kentucky National Guard at the western Kentucky training grounds. Many members of the guard needed to have their shooting skills re-examined. Their M-16 issue assault rifles were used to update and review of strategic and basic military procedures and practices.

At the firing range, a permanent post located about a mile down from the main campsite, one could hear the sharp crack of M-16 rifles rolling over the clear water creek running alongside the main road to the range. While one group shot, another group waited, grabbing a quick bite to eat and being briefed on procedures while waiting.
