Presbyterian Church has a new minister

By Tim Jones
The Carlisle Mercury Staff

CARLISLE — The Presbyterian Church's new minister has a second job.

He goes to law school.

James Welch, minister at the Carlisle Presbyterian Church, attends law school at the University of Kentucky and spends 30 hours a week on his ministerial duties.

Welch, a native of Columbia, South Carolina, attended the University of South Carolina, graduating with a degree in broadcast journalism in 1986.

Welch had originally attended college with the intent of being a Naval officer and was in the Navy ROTC unit at South Carolina. He had a scholarship during his sophomore year and began to consider the ministry at this time, also. Welch asked the Navy if he could become a chaplain, but the answer was no. Since all ROTC students have to make a decision whether to continue with the program in their junior year, Welch decided not to go into the Navy.

Upon graduation, Welch faced another dilemma; should he go to seminary or to law school?

"I was accepted to both at just about the same time," Welch said, "I spoke to my minister in South Carolina a lot and finally decided to attend seminary."

Welch attended the Louisville Presbyterian Seminary and graduated there in 1989. He began law school in the fall of 1989 and took his first steps toward becoming the minister in Carlisle.

"My first service here was in October 1989 and I came back several times before I was finally hired in May of 90," the combination minister-law school student said.

Welch said he has no plans to make a career out of being a day to day attorney. "I'd eventually like to go into college administration, raising money or doing some other administrative work for a Presbyterian college."

The young minister said he likes Carlisle and the lifestyle here, even though it is quite a bit smaller than Columbia, Louisville and Lexington, his three previous homes.

Welch hopes to start a youth program at the Presbyterian Church and would like to see an increase in attendance. A men's program has been started and has been "pretty successful" in the new minister's view.

James Welch

Welch described his job as a minister as knowing where you are needed. "You have to be there when people need you," Welch noted, "and you often have to know when you're needed without being told you're needed."

In addition, Welch feels his Sunday sermon should prepare the congregation for the workday week. "The sermon has to be specific," he said, "and it has to enable people to put their Christian faith in practice through the week."
