Reducing farm subsidies would benefit farmers

By Stephen P. Rodenfels
The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — U.S. farmers would be better off financially if international negotiators reach a "reasonable" compromise on reducing farm subsidies and eliminating trade barriers, Iowa State University researchers say.

At the same time, a federal farm official said there are improved prospects for reviving trade talks that were suspended in December.

The comments came last Wednesday during a conference on the impact of the so-called Uruguay Round of talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The talks began in the South American nation in 1986 but reached an impasse in Brussels, Belgium, late last year.

Disagreements between the United States and the European Community on agricultural trade caused the stalemate.

There have been no formal meetings under the 107-nation, international trade agreement since the talks were suspended Dec. 7. But Craig Thorn of the U.S. Department of Agriculture said informal meetings last weekend in Switzerland raised hopes for reviving the negotiations.

"We need to go to Congress this month to extend our negotiating authority. We may have found something in Geneva to allow us to do that," said Thorn, the deputy director of the multilateral trade policy affairs at the USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service.

He spoke in response to a question from the audience during the conference sponsored by ISU, the Iowa Department of Agriculture and Iowa business organizations.

When the talks were suspended, the United States was seeking by the year 2000 to reduce government subsidies to farmers by 75 percent and export subsidies by 90 percent from the average levels of the period 1986-88. The European Community wanted limited reductions of 30 percent.

Researchers at ISU's Center for Agricultural and Rural Development released a study on the impact of an agreement that would cut export subsidies on agricultural commodities but for-outweigh the domestic policy cuts," Thorn said.

Net farm income in the United States would be $4 billion higher by 1996 under such an accord than if current policy is unchanged, said William Meyers, the associate director of the center.

Thorn said that because of the sensitive nature of the talks he would not discuss further details.

He said the center.

He said the United States was represented by Julius Katz, the deputy trade representative, and Richard Crowder, the undersecretary of agriculture for international affairs and commodity programs.

He said the only loser among U.S. farmers would be sugar producers, while dairy farmers would see little change and others would enjoy increased income.

Stan Johnson, the director of the ISU center, said one reason U.S. farmers would generally benefit by a compromise is that the United States is seeking by the year 2000 to reduce government subsidies to farmers by 75 percent and export subsidies by 90 percent from the average levels of the period 1986-88. The European Community wanted limited reductions of 30 percent.

Researchers at ISU's Center for Agricultural and Rural Development released a study on the impact of an agreement that would cut export subsidies on agricultural commodities but fo-outweigh the domestic policy cuts," Thorn said.

Thorn said Arthur Dunkel, the director general of GATT, met informally last weekend in Geneva with representatives of the United States, the 12-nation European Community, Japan and Aus-tralia to see if they could find a way to move forward. He said the meeting was supposed to be secret, but that the media learned of the sessions.

"There was some perception of an EC attitude shift" that could provide a way to resume the talks, Thorn said. He would not elaborate and added it was too early to say if there will be progress.

"We still need substantial movement," he said.

Low rate loan approved

A new low-interest loan program for farmers, created under legislation sponsored by state Representative Adrian Arnold, D-Mt. Sterling, has been approved by the Kentucky Agriculture Finance Corporation.

The loan program was established by the 1990 Kentucky General Assembly under House Bill 557, sponsored by Arnold. The finance corporation and the loan program are designed to provide financial assistance for existing agricultural enterprises and to stimulate new agricultural ventures in the state.

Farmers can apply to borrow up to $50,000 for a one-to-three year period at a fixed rate, and the funds can be used for almost any agriculture venture.

"We have tried several times to create financial assistance programs for farmers and I believe this can be the most successful in terms of providing small operating loans," Arnold said.

"Although the 1990 Legislature set aside $500,000 for this program ability to make loans."...

The loans will be initiated by local banks and cannot be tied with any existing agricultural loans at that institution.

AG warns of war scams

BOSTON (AP) — Attorney General Scott Harshbarger warned state residents today to be wary of war-related fundraising scams.

"There are many worthwhile and legitimate charities," he said.

"Unfortunately, the war also provides fertile ground for unscrupulous individuals to profit financially by exploiting those who wish to express their patriotism and support for our troops."

Harshbarger said his office has received an increased number of inquiries and complaints in recent days regarding war - related fundraising.

All charities and fundraisers operating in the state are required to register with the attorney general's office. The requirement applies to businesses which advertise that a portion of their sales proceeds will go to charity.

The attorney general pointed out registration with his office does not mean that the attorney general approves or endorses the organization.

"Our goal is to educate people about potential problems, prevent exploitation before it occurs and ensure that legitimate fundraisers comply with the law," Harshbarger said.

Harshbarger offered suggestions for avoiding scams.

People should beware of look-alike charities, and of for-profit organizations that sound like non-profits.
