Nicholas School Board members attend conference

Louise Zachary, John Cleaver, Jr., David Smoot, Boogie Hall, and Sammy Vice, of the Nicholas County Board of Education attended the 1991 Annual Conference of the Kentucky School Boards Association in Louisville, February 15-17.

With the theme, "Winds of Change", this year's conference focused on various aspects of education reform being implemented in the state's public schools.

Among the topics covered were school-based decision making, ungraded primary education, family resource centers and early childhood education.

Among general session speakers was futurist Dr. Lowell Catlett, who teaches and conducts research in marketing, policy, futures markets, management and futuristic issues.

Other speakers included James Ogleshy, past-president of the National School Boards Association, Dr. Thomas Boysen, Kentucky's Commissioner of Education, and Dr. Penny Sanders, who heads Kentucky's new Office of Educational Accountability, which was created by the 1990 Kentucky Education Reform Act.

Among topics for pre-conference workshops which several board members also attended were parent involvement, managing change in a whirlwind of reform and effective leadership.

More than 1100 school board members, superintendents and school administrators participated in the Annual Conference.

Outstanding programs in 40 local districts were exhibited during the conference as part of Share Your Success.

Nicholas reports no farm fatalaties, Harrison has two

By KY Farm Bureau

Of the 39 Kentuckians reported killed farm accidents last year, 16, or slightly over 40 per cent, of the victims were 65 or older. Nicholas County reported no farm fatalities, while Harrison County had two.

That was one of the key findings in the 1990 farm fatality survey, released recently by Kentucky Farm Bureau. It was the eighth year that the Farm Bureau's safety department has surveyed fatal farm accidents in the state.

Another trend, according to Joe Claxon, survey coordinator, is the higher-than-normal percentage of the accidents that were tractor related.

Thirty-two of the 39 deaths came from work with tractors, or around 82 per cent of the total. Last year some 64 per cent of the total came in the tractor category.

Despite the trends in the new survey, 1990 rated as the third -safest year overall on Kentucky farms since 1983. Claxon said the 58 fatalities in 1984 placed that year as the deadliest of the eight surveyed. Lowest totals for the period came in 1988 and 1989, when 36 deaths were reported each year.

The trend toward more deaths in the older age grouping is worrisome, said Claxon. Unlike most occupational groups, farmers tend to work past normal retirement age.

With fewer young people seeking careers in agriculture, the average age of farmers nationwide is now over 55, Claxon noted. "With older farmers now more the norm that the exception, we may need to focus more attention on safety training for this age group," he said.

Claxon, who directs health and rural safety programs for Farm Bureau, says the hazards posed by tractors may eventually decline as newer equipment with more safety features replaces the older machines still found on Kentucky farms.

"Roll-over structures or rollbars are now standard equipment on new tractors and that alone can virtually eliminate tractor roll-over deaths when used with seat belts," he said.

In last year's survey, 23 of the 32 tractor deaths were caused by overturns, while 7 victims were run over by the machine.

Tractor deaths can also occur on highways and through accidental contact with drive shafts or implements.

Other findings of the 1990 survey:

-One of the victims was female, 38 male

-Of the accidents where time was indicated, 27 were afternoon accidents, 11 occurred in the morning

-Deaths not specifically tractor-related included six with other farm equipment

-a complete age breakdown of the victims showed that in addition to the 16 who were 65 or over, 10 were 45 to 64, 5 were 25 to 44, 4 were 15 to 24, and 4 were 14 or under. the youngest victim was 20 months, the oldest 84 years.

A summary of the eight annual fatality reports since 1983 shows that a total of 366 Kentuckians have died during the period.

Hardin County with 10 deaths had the highest total, followed by Nelson and Morgan counties with 9 fatalities each, and Fayette and Pendleton counties with 8 each.

Only 12 counties were fatality-free since 1983. They were Carlisle, Hickman, Crittenden, Caldwell, Clay, Harlan, Letcher, Knott, Pike, Johnson, Boyd and Robertson.
