ground work was laid for members as this is the first impeachment proceedings brought to the General Assembly for consideration in this century. But this week, procedural committee rules were established and include the decision to keep meetings in a mostly neutral area unless otherwise specified. Legislators will be expected to make critical decisions on weighty issues such as environmentally safe solid waste disposal, drunk driving, the Paper and Delta Airline incentive package, the creation of the state income filing deadline for Kentucky military personnel in the Middle East, civil severance tax, confirmation of members, an amendment to the Vietnam veterans and their families, legislation of settled case law relating to the state and consumer protection from price gouging petroleum products, and market disruptions. Other than the governor's address, most of our attention was on the solid-waste bill, which is being scrutinized by committees in both chambers. Finding a way to regulate our landfill and make them safer while limiting how much out-of-state garbage we take in was the impetus for calling the special session in the first place. And despite months of attention by both the legislative and executive branches, a bill of work remains to be done. Many questions need answers. As the committee directed the legislation, House Bill 1 - questions arose about the cost of mandating garbage collection. This proposal is hoped to reduce the practice of dumping waste over hillsides and into sinkholes. In addition, solid-waste measures already in place put new restrictions on the construction of landfills. In order to keep costs down, we are studying ways that the special landfill can be established. Obviously, a lot of work still needs to be done before these questions are answered. While many committees during the first week were merely organizing and scheduling, the impeachment committee appointed to address the charges being brought against Agriculture Commissioner Keith Burnett, chaired by Majority Floor Leader Gregory Stumbo, hit the ground running.
