Senate votes to allow Bell companies to re-enter manufacturing

Did you know that South Central Bell and the other Bell companies around the U.S. were allowed to manufacture our own telephone equipment? Some kind of strange, doesn't it? We can't even enter into partnership agreements with Kentucky because that state has a law about "protection" of its citizens.

We want you to know South Central Bell is doing something about this - and the United States Senate agreed with us recently by passing legislation to allow us to manufacture equipment again.

SCB and the other Bell companies are prohibited from manufacturing telephone equipment by the federal court ruling that broke up the old Bell System in January 1, 1984. (The court ruling also prohibited the Bell companies from carrying most long distance calls and from offering sophisticated electronic database services.) We've worked since then to eliminate these unfair restrictions that limit America's ability to compete in the global Information Age marketplace.

A milestone in this effort was reached on June 5, 1991, when the U.S. Senate allowed the Bell companies to design, research, develop and manufacture telecommunications equipment again. Sponsored by Senator Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.) and cosponsored by our own Sen. Wayne Woodcock (R-KY), the bill passed the Senate by a vote of 73 to 24. The bill now goes on to the House of Representatives, where similar legislation is already pending.

Both Senators Ford and Mitch McConnell voted for S. 173, and we'd like to thank them for their foresight. They understood that allowing SCB and the other Bell companies back into manufacturing would create new American jobs, reduce our dependence on foreign technology research and advance our nation's ability to compete in the international telecommunications market.

We need your help in our fight to revitalize the American telecommunications industry. Take a minute to write your senators and your congressman and tell them you support legislation relieving the Bell companies from the unfair restrictions imposed by the federal court ruling. Once important news on this legislation is reported in Congress this year, so write today and make your opinion known on this vital issue.

Dual Party Relay System surcharge effective July 1

The Kentucky General Assembly, the Kentucky Public Service Commission, the telecommunications industry and citizen leadership in its speech and hearing impaired community have worked together to develop a dual party relay system for Kentucky. This service allows deaf, hearing impaired and speech impaired individuals communicate with hearing and/or speech capable people via a Telecommunications Device for the Deaf, with the aid of specially trained operators.

To pay for Kentucky's dual party relay system, the Public Service Commission has ordered all Kentucky telephone companies to subsidize. This charge is effective July 1, 1991.

The Kentucky dual party relay system is scheduled to be operational on October 1, 1991. It will help people, and hearing-impaired Kentuckians make full use of the telephone in their daily lives.
