This year's NIHW theme, "Our Team Works For You," is a timely one for the '90s," said William S. Coon, Jr., President of the Kentucky Hospital Association. "It will not be a surprise to anyone who uses hospital services that increasingly, community residents and health professionals have to work as a team."

One aspect of the team support needed is the challenge to interest young persons in the specialty career opportunities available in the health professions. Nursing and allied health are professionally rewarding careers with excellent future employment opportunities," said Coon.

The health care team in the United States consists of more than eight million people. Our team is committed to providing quality health care to persons in our service area," said Coon.
