The Gift Of Sight Good vision is a gift your whole family deserves and it should not be taken for granted.

Children's eyes change from the moment they are born. These changes affect the way they see and often accelerate during the school years. Children rarely recognize these changes. They think that's the way they are supposed to see. And perhaps the most unfortunate children are those with "20/20 vision" when in fact they have a problem of eye coordination or other abnormality not recognized except by very thorough examination by a discerning optometrist. They accomplish their school work with great difficulty when a vision correction could help them to be more successful with less effort.

Adults eyes undergo change, too. Work loads, different kinds of visual tasks and stress affect the eyes. General health also plays an important role in the way you see and in the health of the eye. With increasing age the eyes can be more at risk to develop eye disease or conditions that hasten the loss of sight. The value of the annual eye health examination for my patients is that of diagnosing eye disease ahead of time with hope for prevention. Annual eye examinations often uncover other general health conditions. Changes in your eyes and the way you see cannot necessarily be prevented. They can, however, usually be corrected with prescription lenses and so continue your way of life. The gift of good sight is precious one - have an examination by an optometrist who cares for you.
