CARLISLE — Jill Hardin, a senior at Nicholas County High School, earned fourth place in the second annual conference of the Lieutenant Governor's Student Exchange Program and has received the honor of possibly attending any State of Kentucky supported public college for one year tuition free. Hardin, who participated in the program last January, prepared a presentation contrasting her life in Nicholas County with that of students in Louisville, Kentucky. She was paired with Louisville student, Carolyn Kesler, and together they prepared a presentation and talk of their experiences. The work Kesler and Hardin put in making their presentation paid off as it was elected the winner in the sixth congressional district. Following her win, Hardin was automatically named one of seven finalists, out of 89 students, to go to the conference held at Kentucky State University in Frankfort late last September and complete for scholarship awards. The top three finishers were:

Sibert returns from National Youth Leadership Council in St. Louis

By Josh Shepherd

CARLISLE — Nicholas County High School senior Janelle Sibert, picked as one of central Kentucky's top four youth leaders in the state returned Tuesday from the National Youth Leadership Council meeting in St. Louis, Missouri. Sibert was one of 50 students across the nation to be chosen to participate in the program, submitted the Town Meeting on Tomorrow. She and three other Kentucky students left from Lexington early Saturday morning and arrived at their hotel in St. Louis late that evening, Sibert said. Sibert, the first Nicholas County student ever to be present for these proceedings, said the general idea of the meetings and activities was to instill in students an awareness of many world issues her generation may face in the coming years. The seminars and meetings, held in conference rooms at the hotel and at various locations around Washington University, focused on education, especially in the realm of teacher compensation and new educational developments, and a critical view of the world media, especially in context of its emphasis on the negative presentation of youth. "Basically the seminar's leaders focused on these issues and we discussed ideas the seminar leaders presented. One particular speaker, Carole Harder, is a professional motivational speaker out of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was very inspirational. She told us that the youth of today are this country's most valuable and plentiful natural resource," Sibert said. But aside from the seminar and interviews for scholarship awards, in which, incidentally, two Kentucky students won top honors, Sibert said the most memorable aspect of the Youth Council meeting were the team playing challenges the council had the students perform. "Basically, Sibert said, the team was formed at random and concentrated on activities to develop trust, spirit and human awareness. "We were dubbed the most intellectual by the rest of the teams. I have no real idea why. We just called ourselves the 'rats' and said 'good dancers,'" Sibert said with a slightly embarrassed grin. Groups performed trust activities like the blind faint, where one person stands up on a high spot and falls backwards, trusting the other members of their group to catch them. "There were many important issues we discussed and they really made me think about the kind of world my generation is inheriting as we grow up and enter the world. "But the most important thing I took from the Town Meeting were the friends I made there. It was for only three short days, but we became instantly very close friends. I don't think I've ever been through another experience like it. "My goal now is to encourage this year's junior class to apply for admission in the program next year. All it takes is an essay and an interview and a short waiting period to find out if you've been accepted and it really is worthwhile," Sibert said.

Tourism holds fund raisers

CARLISLE — The Carlisle-Nicholas County Tourism Inc. has been busy the last two weeks with a bean supper, two nights in a haunted house, and a quilt show. The bean supper and two haunted houses were a huge success according to Gladys Shrovet and Julie Metzger, co-directors of the Tourism Inc. board. The organization made $1150 on the bean supper and two haunted houses over the last two weeks. The tourism organization is planning to use the fund raiser money to put bathrooms in the jail. There were 486 people who toured the haunted houses over the two nights and 176 people attended the bean supper. "The more times we can show Carlisle and the interest there in the community will make people aware of what we have to offer." There were 135 quilts shown over the weekend and about 150 people viewed the quilts. Several of the visitors were from towns such as Lexington, Flemingsburg, Lynchburg, Paris, Winchester, Mt. Vernon, and Owensboro.
