Deer check stations

Did you know deer check station operators are volunteers? The Nicholas County deer check operators are Bowles Grocery, Carlsle Quick Stop, Abner's Grocery, Seapps Service Station, and Old DAD Grocery at Barterville.

Each year, thousands of hanged Kentucky white-tails are checked by volunteers who aren't paid a penny for their services. During this November alone, hunters will bring about 60,000 deer to official deer check stations where volunteers fill out game check cards, one for each animal. These volunteers obviously play a vital role in helping the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources keep track of what's happening with the state's deer herd - at no cost to the department or sportsmen.

Many volunteers run deer check stations from small businesses they own such as mini-marts, filling stations, rural grocery stores, "mom & pop" shops and sporting good outlets. And good business calls for putting customers first. So, if you have to wait your turn to have your deer checked because the owner is waiting on customers, be patient. All you're out is a little time.

Remember, a hearty "thank you" is always welcome and purchasing items from the business helps the owner to continue offering that location as a deer check station.
