Dove hunting season begins

The Department of Fish and Wildlife encourages all Dove hunters to have a safe, enjoyable and legal Dove hunting season. Our law enforcement officers will be out in force during the days preceding the opening of season looking for any potentially baite areas. They will be glad o answer questions from any one concerning illegal baiting.

If you have been invited to a Dove hunt or if you have asked someone to allow you to hunt on their land, remember, it is up to you, the hunter, to be sure there is no bait on the field where you intend to hunt.

Some things a hunter should look for on a field which might indicate bait are: shelled or cracked corn, wheat or other grains or feed which were not grown on that field. Excessive amounts of any of these grains may indicate that the area is baited. The presence of obvious piles and strips of grain or feed in any location where they would not normally be found, or a heavy concentration of Dove over a field where no feed is apparent could indicate prior baiting.

Remember, if in doubt about whether or not a field is baited ask the landowner, obtain permission to hunt, abide by the daily bag limit and have an enjoyable Dove hunting season.

"We're taking heat and cooling from the ground. And that's just about as resourceful as you can get." — Tracy Royse, Flemingsburg, Ky.

When Tracy Royse built a house in Flemingsburg for his mother, Marjorie, they chose geothermal heating and cooling.

"We were looking for the lowest overall cost," Tracy says, "and geothermal's low operating cost will pay back the price difference. The rebates from KU help, too."

"You can go from room to room and there's no difference in temperature," Marjorie says. "And it's clean, quiet and carefree. It's just a really good way to heat a house!"

"Another thing I like is the free hot water, too," says Tracy. "That's a big savings. I could go on and on. I would recommend it to anybody."

For more information, contact a customer service representative at the local KU office or a heating and cooling dealer today.
