Federal bill.....

Of the architects who had interviewed for the job of planning a high school, only Klofoster and Associates, had said vocally that their work until the school was assured of funding, both Hall and Superintendent-Curt Gilbert said.
Board members, however, were skeptical that the architectural firm would spend the time drawing up such specific plans and not assume costs for their work. Board attorney Billy Hopkins announced that he had written confirmation from Klofoster that no charge would come until the school received funding.
However, board members also agreed that the federal proposal sounded promising. School Superintendent Robert Gilbert said he would try to contact Senator Walter Smith for specific information about the bill. If it was receiving support in the house and senate, and advice on how Nicholas County might proceed if the bill passed.
'It is always the school board's primary function to establish school policy and plan for its future. These plans should be constantly updated.

Carlisle City Council members voted five to one Monday night during regular business session to pass a resolution which would have paid the tax. The decision by council members came after listening to city attorney Skip Watson report on a draft of an ordinance levying a 1 percent occupational tax.

Nicholas County Fiscal Court, in regular session last Wednesday evening, began discussion for a second time on a proposed payroll-occupational tax for Nicholas County. Nicholas County Judge-Executive Reese Smoot reminded those present the discussion was not a first reading, but merely a time for defining and clarifying the issue.

Nicholas County Board of Education voted unanimously to hire Prester W. Blair, CPA, to audit the 1986-87 books for the school system. Blair will begin his audit session Monday night at the board hearing. Blair will be accompanied by Ed Mansfield, Ed. Ed. Blair will be accompanied by Ed Mansfield, Ed. Blair will be accompanied by Ed Mansfield, Ed.
