By Job Shepherd
The necessity is the mother of invention. Elmer Booth is living proof of the truth of that old saying.

Necessity breeds ingenuity

Elmer Booth demonstrates his hand built chemical sprayer in the front yard of his house on Mayville Road. The sprayer was designed specifically to keep chemical spray off Booth when he treated his 1.5 acre tobacco leaf for insects and disease. Using a hand sprayer, he said, would often leave residues and he feared the negative effects these poisons may have had on him.

Booth is builder of the "Elmer"

So did the only thing that he had completed the spray-coat. He went and thought of his fields, it has been something, something that a state of constant display and could get the herbicide and insecticide to his tobacco and not on him. It is unfortunate that when across the road, just can't seem to get over it. He's been talking about it and showing this story just a bit more clear to you readers, I will name his idea, as the "Elmer". Booth designed the Elmer one other thing to help tobacco farmers with small farms and farms in mind. It is a credit to his ingenuity, and the availability of special parts, that the Elmer came into being. Moreover, it has captured the imagination and attention of his neighbors on Mayville Road and after its sale utility to work.
