DARE

"The kids love it. They really relate well with the troopers. The troopers eat dinner with them and go out on the playground with them," he said. "And the kids have always been open (about child abuse) with the troopers. The program helps with more than just drugs."

The state police will probably have complete control over this program until other local law enforcement agencies include D.A.R.E. instruction in their salaries.

"The Kentucky State Police do it as a public service," Hammons said.

Hammons said Carey better get used to the idea of being mobbed in the hallways by adoring students, just as Dolwick was when he taught.

With his plans to have former Cincinnati Reds player Doug Flynn at the students' D.A.R.E. graduation, he is sure to be a hit.
