would like to volunteer to help it would be appreciated," said Dale.

Letcher asks that each landowner have information as to deed book and page number. However, if owners have no idea as to any particulars then a purchase date for the property would be as helpful.

"We've got to make sure the person signing for that particular property has the legal right to sign.

"If I have information on the deed it will all go a lot faster, if I don't have any information at all, it will slow down the process considerably because I won't have a point from which to start looking," Letcher said.

Garvey Curtsinger, board chairperson, cautioned many property owners are reluctant to sign an easement through their property.

"If we have to go cross country to get the line laid we're going to end up planning a lot more line than we have dollars. That means the people who signed up later or are on the fringes of the plan may end up being chopped off and we don't want that.

"If we can shoot straight through we can save millage, time and dollars," Curtsinger said.

Garten noted the process of condemnation is an option at which the water board may look to in the event many landowners refuse easement.

Board members agreed they would like to take more positive steps to obtain permission from landowners rather than follow the condemnation process.

After easements are obtained and titles researched, bids must be advertised for a minimum of 21 days. Garten also reported the Farmer's Home Administration would take at least six weeks to set up a loan bond preclosing after the lowest bid was received.

Several members of the water board questioned the engineers about clean-up procedures following the laying of the line.

Dale said, "10 percent of the contractor's money is held until clean-up is satisfactorily completed.

"After the lines are set, the area packed, filled in and settled, there is enough funds allotted to allow for top soil to be put over the site and for it be reseeded.

"But if the site is not cleaned up, land owners have got to let us know before we can do anything about it," Dale concluded.

The next regular meeting of the water board will be held on July 8, 7 p.m. at the courthouse.

Any questions concerning easements should be directed toward Dawn Letcher, board attorney.

Budget meeting

than the $40,000 we were approved for last year. I was told cuts needed to be made and I resubmitted $36,973, cutting it $3,000 myself. The court ended up cutting it more, down to $30,000— a total cut of $10,000," said Phillips.

The extension office will receive a home extension agent as a replacement for the retired Mrs. Margie Wilson on July 21.

But, according to Phillips, the office may not receive a replacement for the 4-H agent because its budget is no longer funded for one.

"Because of state shortfalls there are 46 floating job vacancies. This means there is a list of job vacancies, when you lose an extension agent who relocates or retires you go on the bottom of this list, when one is added to the list, the vacancy on the top of that list is filled.

"Right now we cannot even be added to the bottom of this list because our budget has been cut 25 percent at the county level.

"Now, even if we could be added, that does not mean the money budgeted for that position would be used this year, but if we had the chance to fill the position we can't because we don't have the funds.

"And I really don't quite understand why the projected payroll tax is so much lower than what it was.

"A few years ago they didn't even have a second or a third shift out there. I just think they ought to spread these cuts around a little instead of hitting two programs so hard and then funding all the rest the same," Phillips said.

According to Lucy Dibble of Jockey International's personnel department in Kenosha, Wisconsin, Jockey presently employs 750 in Carlisle.

"And according to the numbers recorded at the end of last year fluctuation has not been great," Dibble said.

But County Treasurer Wanda Dotson said the court felt layoffs at Jockey would cause a decrease in payroll tax revenue.

"It is better to under-budget than have funded programs you can't pay for. There is just less revenue coming into the fiscal court than what we have planned to go out.

"Like last year the landfill was budgeted $67,500 and this year they will need $73,900. We cut expenses in the jail, but we have just got more to fund than we have revenue," Dotson said.

The budget will be finalized in the Thursday meeting.

Sitter program graduates eleven

The first wave of Safe Sitter students celebrated their accomplishments during a short graduation ceremony in a classroom of the Community Action Center on Scrubgrass Road Tuesday afternoon.

The Safe Sitter program, sponsored by three major Nicholas County organizations, the Johnson Mathers Health Care Community School of Good Health, the Nicholas County Family Resource and Youth Services Center, and the Community Action Council, was a success beyond its sponsors' expectations.

We were very proud to be a co-sponsor of the Safe Sitter program, Dan Miller, administrator of Johnson Mathers Health Care, said. "When we attended the graduation session, I was impressed at the variety of and depth of the material they learned."

"We were all very pleased at how fast and thoroughly these first students were able to learn and apply the material," Safe Sitter instructor Cindy Hughes said.

The amount of information students were expected to absorb during the two day course was broad and very detailed. Safe Sitter involved much more than child and infant first aid and rescue breathing, although both subjects formed a crucial part of the course.

But then, Safe Sitter proved more than just a course in babysitting. The material these students learned had a great deal to do with teaching responsibility and maturity.

"It was kind of a course in growing up," said Safe Sitter instructor Georgia Livingood.

There were three instructors, Carla Robinson, RN, Cindy Hughes, RN, and Georgia Livingood. Nicholas County Elementary School nurse and averaging out to about four students per teacher. The size and ratio, teachers said, may have had a direct influence on their students' performance.

The Safe Sitter program was created and developed by Indianapolis Pediatrician Patricia A. Keener, MD, in response to the tragic death of a colleague's toddler who was being cared for by an adult sitter. The program was originally intended to teach young people life-saving and emergency skills.

The Safe Sitter course runs for two six-hour days and covers the following subjects: Accident Management, Infant and Child Rescue Breathing and Heimlich maneuvers, Basic First Aid, Child development from birth to ages 6 and older, Fire and Personal Safety.

"One of the best things about the course is that it encourages these kids to think for themselves. I give them a specific situation they could face and they work out the best way to handle it," Safe Sitter instructor Carla Robinson explained.

According to one Safe Sitter student, "Safe Sitter taught me a lot about being responsible and growing up. I feel more confident about myself. If anyone plans to be a babysitter or just take care of their little brother or sister, I really think it is important to take this course."

The following students represent the first in what is hoped to be a long line of safe sitter graduates: Ashley VanMeter, Sarah Curtsinger, Allison Grant, Rachelle Reynozo, Kari Gifford, Katie Hopkins, Jeremiah Day, Paul Baker, Andrea Razor, Rachel Ecton, and Carla Smith.

Each Safe Sitter graduate carries an identification card and booklet of material that reviews many of the lessons taught during the class sessions. Both items are invaluable information for the sitter and for the parents of children.

So encouraging was the response to the first Safe Sitter classes that the sponsors agreed to offer the course one more time this year on July 13 - 14.

All boys and girls between ages 11-14 interested in participating in the Safe Sitter program must contact Wendy Price at 289-7181 for registration information.

As these graduates have learned, there is more to infant and child care than just sitting.

Field day planned

By Heather Mathes-Harris
Of The Carlisle Mercury Staff

CARLISLE - The Nicholas County Cooperative Extension office is inviting the public to an agricultural field day planned for June 22, 5:30 p.m. at Cliff Vice's farm on Moorefield Road.

4-H Club members will hold a demonstration of new equipment and preservatives.

A University of Kentucky specialist and a factory representative will also be on hand to speak with farmers.

According to Mike Phillips, local extension agent, new hay mowers and other new hay raking equipment which "fluffs it up" will be presented for inspection.

"Also, representatives from All Tech will be talking about a chemical hay preservative they manufactured that allows hay to be bailed at a higher moisture content without mold setting up on it," described Phillips. "This is an all natural product, its not harmful to the animals that later consume it because it has the same type acidic components in the rumen of cattle."

Phillips encourages everyone in Nicholas County to attend. "We think this is some valuable information that farmers here in Nicholas County can use, plus it's a good time to get together."

Phillips also mentioned 4-H camp for Nicholas County is rolling around once again.

Applications for 4-H camp may be picked up at the extension office in the old armory and are due back by July 16th.

Camp, held August 2 through 6 for Nicholas County, is open to children in the fourth through eighth grades at a cost of $58. Older youth may apply for junior counselor posts.

Babbage explains reporting deadlines

Corporations in Nicholas County have until June 30 to file their annual verification reports in his office, according to Secretary of State Bob Babbage.

Babbage explained that corporations which fail to meet the deadline will receive a second notice which will be mailed to the corporations' registered agent at the address reported to the Secretary of State last September 1.

"Business owners and managers need to be aware of the legal deadline for corporate reporting to avoid complications and possible administrative dissolution," Babbage said.

"Businesses, especially small businesses, are the backbone of Kentucky's economy, presently providing nearly half the jobs in the state and are expected to create nearly 60 percent of the new jobs throughout this decade," Babbage said.

Providing information about the services and requirements of government is just one of the ways the state can assist businesses.

Failure to comply with the second deadline will result in the Secretary of State issuing a certificate of administrative dissolution by November 1.

Missing the second deadline can be costly in the ways of penalties, re-instatement fees, and extra paperwork, he said.

Babbage said his office mailed 80,043 annual verification reports to both domestic and foreign corporations doing business in Kentucky.

The number of new corporations in Kentucky was higher in 1992 than in the previous years, Babbage said.

Last year was the first since before 1988 that over 10,000 new corporations filed papers with the Secretary of State's office.

At the end of the first quarter of this year over 80,043 corporations were in good standing with the Secretary of State's office. Over 4,000 new corporations have filed the necessary paper work in the office so far this year, Babbage said.

Effective June 16
Farm Bureau Insurance will be moving to 248 East Main Street, formerly the Jewelry Patch. The new office hours will be 9 - 5, Saturday, 9 - 12. Closed on Wednesdays.
