School Board

But the high school isn't the only school with a grave need in Nicholas County.

"When we spoke to several members of the Kentucky Education Department we were told adding four rooms to the high school would stay within the facility plans approved by the Education Department," Gilbert said.

"That was also having a crowding problem at the elementary. We would like to separate the sixth, seventh and eighth grades from the elementary."

"You see, the maximum class size for younger students is 24. It used to be we could put 35 to 40 students in those rooms."

"And it is not only the junior high which needs more room. According to KERA, we are supposed to have room for half day classes of 4 year olds which should be in our facility with primary eight now we have to contract with Louisville because we don't have the room," Gilbert said.

and parents, but also two local business people, one board member and the superintendent to act as an officio non-voting member."

The ultimate decision lies with the board, but the committee deals with feasibility of the plan before making a recommendation.

"When deciding on options concerning a new high school or additions and renovations of the old structure, the group looks at geographic, current facility planning and the financial ability of the district to incur debt," Louscher said.

The planning committee also examines the state of existing facilities... Industry wants to pull out. This is a more divergent group, it's open to the public and helps the public understand what kind needs the school has, if and when those needs can be met."

might take anywhere from six months to a year," Gilbert said. "The first thing we have to do is sit down, the board and the council, and decide what course of action will be taken. Maybe they don't want to change anything and leave it as it is, but a decision has to be made either way."

Gilbert said the matter would be on the agenda for the next regular board meeting set for Tuesday, November 9, p.m.

Recycling center offers service

By Heather Mathews-Harris
OF THE CAROLINIAN
The Nicholas County Recycling Center will begin to accept glass from plastic and newspaper, but it's worth the equipment and the building was paid for by grants from the state.

The county did pay for some of the equipment used to separate the glass and plastic. A piece of equipment used to separate the glass and plastic is set at that total amount of money.

The recycling center already takes newspapers. "But we are getting several tons of recyclable items mixed in with the newspaper. Stink magazines and coupons are not in newspaper items and can't be recycled here, our Board isn't either," Howard said.

"Also, plastic bottles must be separated out from the glass. We do not want any plastic that has had oil in it. The oil will contaminate everything and it cannot be recycled at this point. There is a market for all of it yet, and there is a special process to take out the oil which we don't have the capability to do."

Howard also said plastic drink bottles, which must be kept separate from all other plastic containers, may be started recycling more easily if they are crushed and baled.

"All the plastic caps must be taken off first," Howard said. Glass products will be sorted according to color - clear, amber and green.

"We don't do glass. It is hard like newspaper after it is sorted and then shipped to Lexington like the newspaper," Howard said.

The recycling center also takes appliances at no charge. "But we have had some appliances come in that haven't been cleaned out, one came in full of meat and you talk about mess when it comes time for us to clean that up. But I've been reading Home numbers with the name where people who drop them off so we can prevent this problem from happening again," Howard said.

The biggest piece of advice Howard had to offer involved the separation of items.

"Glass has to be separated from plastic bottles and aluminum cans. Newspaper must be separated from any other recyclable picks as well. Everything should be kept in separate containers and as many items in a container as possible should be packed down as tight as you can get. If items are not separated, we can't do it all here, and it makes our job twice as hard," Howard said.

Howard encouraged everyone in Nicholas County to take advantage of the free recycling service.

"As early as 1997 the legislature is going to call for a 25 percent reduction in the amount of disposed trash we are producing, people have got to get more accustomed to recycling before then," Howard said.

"And this is a free service provided to the people of Nicholas County by the county, so if you have any questions or
