A Millerburg man was killed in a fire at his home Friday morning caused possibly by a faulty space heater in the bathroom. State police said. The Millerburg Fire department and the Bourbon County Fire and Police Department responded to the call at 1725 a.m. from a neighbor. Pastor Ferda, a minister from Watoma, Kenya, visited this area. He was sent his church, which is affiliated with the Brethren Baptist Association and the Kentucky Baptist, to speak to members of the church last week which was filed last by four former Nicholas County teachers against the Nicholas County Board of Education. Judge Hermandorfer ruled in favor of the teachers, nullifying the Board's decision to reduce the teachers, none of whom had tenure.

Teachers respond to questions on education reform
This is the second in a series of articles about how the Kentucky Education Reform Act (KERA) has changed classroom learning in the Nicholas County Schools.
By Leigh Stone

The school teachers reported that "watered down" learning. Too much group learning, too much testing and rote drill work on the basics are the downfall of the education reform plan designed to improve learning in Kentucky's classrooms.
KERA (Kentucky Education Reform Act) was mandated in 1990 and has supporters and naysayers.
Some educators think parents don't have enough information about KERA to help children learn or teachers teach.
Cheryl Rawlings, a Nicholas County Elementary School fifth-grade social studies teacher with 18 years of experience. If parents had the time, they should come and visit for a day. Not only in their child's room but several. They should feel free to ask questions and offer suggestions. Rawlings stated that KERA was a disaster.
The questionnaire asked teachers to discuss how they teach methods have changed since KERA. Before KERA, I could expect my students to have a better understanding of the System. The test is taken by the eighth and 12th grade students and covers reading, writing, math, science and social studies. Elementary school kids were sending this work through the KING test.
