Lawrence honored at EKU

Mary Ann Lawrence, daughter of Brenda and Rusty Lawrence, was named the recipient of this year's Outstanding Freshman Contributor Award.

Lawrence is a returning sophomore from Carlisle, Kentucky. She worked her first year as activities editor and is returning to the staff this fall as the sports editor. In addition to the Outstanding Freshman Contributor Award, last year Lawrence won the outstanding staff writer award. In the meantime, Lawrence has earned a 3.0 GPA at EKU.

"Mary Ann is a good journalist and a good student. In the next three years, The Progress expects great things from her," said Prass, advisor to the 10,000 circulation student newspaper.

The award for this year's recipient is a minicassette recorder and a $100 bookstore credit for books and supplies for the fall semester.

Farm injuries studied

FRANKFORT, Kentucky (July 26, 1994)—Eight fatal farming injuries were reported in a nine-county study area in Kentucky from April 1993 through March 1994. In addition, 54 farming injuries were serious enough to require hospitalization.

These were among the 583 people who sought medical treatment for injuries suffered on farms in Warren, Barren, Bracken, Fleming, Mason, Robertson, Hardin, Larue and Nelson counties.

Michael B. Auslander, a medical epidemiologist in the state Department for Health Services, says that identifying the types of farm injuries in Kentucky will lead to efforts to reduce injuries and fatalities.

"With 91,000 farms in Kentucky, there's a potential for thousands of injuries each year," he said. "That study is meant to gather information on injuries and how they occur so that we know how to focus safety education."

The nine-county area is home to 11,405 farms and more than 1.5 million farm acres. The nine-counties involved are representative of farming in Kentucky, allowing researchers to apply data statewide.

Kentucky has the fourth highest number of farms in the country; however, most of them are small family farms with an average size of 152 acres. The average farm nationally is 400-600 acres.

"Because most farms in Kentucky are small family farms, they tend to be limited financially and many cannot afford the most modern, safest, newest equipment," Auslander said.

"For example, since 1976, tractor manufacturers have been required to include roll-over bars and safety belts on all models.
