CARLISLE: Diana Willis has been named by the state selection committee as a temporary school board member representing District 4 for the Nicholas County Schools.

Willis was interviewed by a committee headed by non-voting member William Birdwell, former superintendent of schools in Bourbon County.

Randy Eversly of her appointment, which was verified in writing by the committee last week. I am really glad to have the opportunity to serve on the board. I'd want to see education improve in Nicholas County. I think we have an excellent staff and teachers in the schools.

The Edgdon caboose at Lake Carnico will soon become a downtown attraction thanks to the generosity of the Edgdon and the Nicholas County Historical Society and Tourism Inc. The Edgdon's donated the caboose to the historical society. Historical Society Co-Chairperson Joan Corley said the organization will pay a contractor to move the caboose to downtown behind the Old Jail (located on Main Street). Several ideas have been discussed for the use of the caboose, such as making it a museum or a bed and breakfast. The red caboose is of historical value, Corley said. TTI has begun to donating railway ties for the project.

Tent Revival Aug. 22 - Sept. 3 at courthouse

The public is invited to a tent revival to be held Monday, Aug. 22 to Sunday, Sept. 3 at the Nicholas County Courthouse lawn each night beginning at 7 p.m. The tent revival project began last year by Darrell Sexton, pastor of Assembly of God, and Richard Gardner, pastor of Oakland Mills United Methodist.

Brother Sexton and I had the idea last year to see the churches involve everybody together on neutral ground. We mainly started it in hopes of starting a revival in Carlisle that spread across the country. We feel it's possible," Gardner said, adding, "We've been praying about this all year and are proud that even more pastors are involved this year."
