COMMENTARY
Opinion by Jason Hart, Carlisle On-Site Manager
I recently had the opportunity to meet someone that I should admire in others: First, he is very handy. By that I mean he is very adept at fixing, building, assembling, etc.

Second, he likes to fish. For this one, I don't think an explanation is necessary. Anyone who enjoys fishing can't be all bad. But back to the first item, I know that Mr. Fisher is handy around the office.

There are handy gigs, ingenious rig-ups, tools and health kit devices all through the office, and I'm sure they can all be traced back to Mr. Fisher.

I admire anyone that can put together or take apart anything more complex like a Compaq computer and get it put back together without any parts left over.

Whenever I find myself forced to work on anything more complicated than a toothpick, I usually end up with at least a spring or a screw left over. My approach, however, is to fire up my plug-in power sander I'm "working" on or see if it works.

Anyway, I called Mr. Fisher Monday morning about some lights in the Mercury office that have been flickering, and a leak in the roof.

Mr. Fisher came in while I was at lunch, and returned after I returned.

I must admit, I was nervous about meeting this man. I suppose it was because I have read a lot of what he has written in the "How to" columns of the Mercury, and I was sure that he was a know-it-all. I was relieved to find that Mr. Fisher has no such pretensions.

On my eighth day, when he turned out to be a very down-to-earth man, and I spent nearly an hour talking with him. I know this comes as a surprise to many of our readers, but Mr. Fisher is a very capable man. He has seen the quality of the photographs Mr. Fisher produced, and the quality of writing and reporting, and the amount of work Mr. Fisher and his staff put into the Mercury each week. I can only say I am proud to be part of the Carlisle Mercury staff. I hope that the readers of the Mercury will also be impressed with the quality of the work that our editorial staff does.
