"Our office, which is rent free, does not require a lot of upkeep. We pay utilities every month and the phone bill. "And we have made headway, our CertifCities program has shown we have grown economically, the Industrial Park has been upgraded and accepted and we've made several contacts who have examined Nicholas County and are looking to relocate."

Marshall also pointed out the industrial authority and chairman of commerce is a part of the Kentucky Round Table... "Our purpose here is to keep Nicholas County from dying. And we don't have a lot of experience... our one employee, who is full time, does not even make $3,000 a year, I don't draw a paycheck and our board of directors also expanded. Marshall said.

"When I got out of high school I had to go to work. I don't remember getting up at 4 a.m. to go to work when I was 17 years old," Howard said.

"I was driving in the cold, snow was blowing and I thought I didn't want my children to have to do this. I want them to be able to work in their community. Sure, there are good jobs here and those good jobs here. I don't want to lose the opportunity to get those good jobs in Nicholas County."

"I was the head of the board of directors and the last person was the president's wife. When we looked at three proposed sites we saw one that didn't have infrastructure, but had everything else essential. One had everything, but was too far to drive from any larger, more populated area. And on the third the president's wife said, 'I am not moving there, they don't have a good school system, no entertainment, I just don't like the area.'"

"I don't want Nicholas County to be that third place. We have a good school system, we have a good hospital and great people live here. Marshall remembers when Nicholas was more densely populated, but business terms. "Carthage used to have a stock market, one of the largest in the world and several very big grocers then, we have now. Those are all gone," Marshall said.

"We've stopped that downtown now, and we're looking to grow even more. It's not a choice anymore. "We have several residents who are retirement age, and we appreciate those people retiring here and calling Carthage home. But when our young people here and find jobs elsewhere, they may not come back here to retire. We want to give them a reason to stay to work here, why we exist."

Marshall also said several business people understand the office is needed. "We did an informal poll and found that about 98 percent of the business people in this community realize we need an industrial park. We're friendly, we're pro business and industrial clients, perspective residents and officials are excited," Marshall said.

"And we have a great working relationship with other surrounding counties, Mt. Sterling, Bourbon County and Georgetown. We can't handle the big fish because we don't have a big port."

"We think the world of jockey and we love that Joecky has chosen to stay in Nicholas County and we're always ready to do anything we can to help them out in any way we can," Marshall said.
