Baesler said he hoped legislature could find a way to open up free trade better with Japan so American products could better enter that country.

Frank Terrell agreed. Somebody's gonna have to knock their door down,' he said.

However, on the other side of the coin, Baesler thinks foreign imports of tobacco to the U. S. are destroying the livelihood of Kentucky tobacco farmers.

Bill Dixon asked Baesler's opinion about military cutbacks. "We need a strong military," he told the congressman.

Baesler replied, 'I think you make a mistake with a shallow army. We've got 400 dictators running around out there. You've got to be able to have enough troops for two places at once. I don't think you'll see all those cuts.'
