Jim Wente

tives, customs and culture. I don't believe in just random change. If you make a change it must be for the better."

Hospital board member and local realtor/auctioneer Mark Mattox commented, "He just seems like a nice fellow - very qualified to do what we hired him to do."

Wente takes the helm from interim administrator Doris Ecton. Ecton has served JMHC for 18 years and will continue as assistant administrator.

Doris has done an excellent job. It has been extremely helpful to have Doris here," Wente commented.

HOME

One of the more attractive lures the JMHC position had for Wente is that Kentucky is home for the new administrator. The location was important. It's close to my family. This is a beautiful area. I've been here before. When I worked at UK Medical Center, we'd drive here, probably in the 1970s. I left Kentucky in 1978."

"I liked the idea of being able to work in a community that's very proud of its facilities - there's a lot of pride in the hospital and nursing home."

Wente and his wife, Patricia Anne, are looking for a place to reside in the area. Their Indiana home recently sold.

Another attraction JMHC ad for Wente is being in an area with such high pride for its ospital and nursing home. "I liked the idea of being able to ork in a community that's very uch proud of its facilities - here's a lot of pride in the hospital and nursing home. It eans a lot to the community nd they support it."

Satisfied to be in the health care field for 23 years, Wente initially thought of realizing a career in manufacturing. His father was a successful tool and die maker in Louisville, which during wartime, manufactured items to keep America's military well supplied.

Later, Wente decided to take a different career route. His older brother, Dr. John Wente, is a retired medical doctor in Virginia. Through him, Wente thought that helping people in health care would differ from manufacturing a product. It was a vocation difference that pleased him, so he re-directed his education following four years in the U. S. Navy flight program during the Vietnam era (1968-1971).

Wente said he volunteered to military service. "I preferred to choose. My brother (John) was in the army as a paratrooper."

Dr. John Wente, Jim's brother, is a retired surgeon at Bedford, Va. He told The Mercury Monday afternoon, "I feel Jim will do well. He's sort of on the quiet side but purposeful and determined."

Dr. Wente recalled his younger days spent on the Oldham County farm. Back then, the younger Wente brother, Jim, liked to work on cars. "Jim was very skilled in automotive work. He liked to re-build engines."

In 1968, Wente received a bachelor of arts degree in business administration from Bellarmine College, Louisville. In 1978, he received a master's degree in business administration from Xavier University, Cincinnati.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

One of Wente's contributions to health care at LaPorte was his part in establishing a community health center for low-income persons in 1993.

The 15,000 square foot center was funded through private donations. Each year, hospital volunteers and community members annually raised $25,000 for the facility, which cost more than $100,000, subsidized by the hospital.

The idea was for patients to pay what they could. "It was not free. If they could only pay $1 they did. We did not promote it or ever give a perception that it was free. We accepted federal funding programs, like medicaid, where eligible."

Important to Wente was the center's ability to provide medical care for those in need and immunizations for children. "We were real proud of that."

The center serves a population of approximately 108,000, which includes several small communities and several large counties in Indiana.

Another worthy program Wente was glad to have been a part of was Habitat for Humanity. Habitat for Humanity provided housing for the homeless at LaPorte. "I found that very rewarding," he commented.

The host family worked with the group and actually was a part of building the home, funded with guarantees.

Johnson Mathers Health Care Administrator Jim Wente likes his new work surroundings at Nicholas County Hospital and JMHC nursing home. Originally from Oldham County, Ky., Wente looks forward to living in the Bluegrass state again. His wife, Patricia Anne, will soon join him in looking for a new residence.
