XBW36HT 4PV14 (Secret Code)

Design your own secret code that no one can ever crack! In your code book, write out the letters of the alphabet. To get the letters and numbers for your special code, cut 36 small pieces of paper. On 18 of the slips, write a letter of the alphabet (pick every other letter like A, C, F, H). On the remaining 18 slips write random numbers (for instance 5, 87, 130, 11, and so on in no particular order). Place the pieces of paper in a box and shake to mix. Pull the first piece of paper out of the box and write the letter or number next to the letter A. Pull out a second piece of paper and write the letter B (A=87, B=W). Continue until you have coded the entire alphabet. You can also code using symbols like >, ~, for q, for example. Be creative! If your code falls into enemy hands, simply change it!

Creature Feature

by Neil B. Schanker

Did you ever want to meet a monkey in the wild? Recently, I had an opportunity to do this.

I traveled to Belize, a small country in Central America, just south of Mexico. Belize contains tropical rain forests, the only areas in which the black howler monkey lives. Howler monkeys are called baboons by the Belizean people.

I drove from Belize City to the Community Baboon Sanctuary. Once there, I had no trouble finding two groups of howler monkeys. How did I know where they were? I followed my ears, because howler monkeys HOWL! Actually, the call is something between a roar and a bark, very deep and very loud. The sounds can be heard over a mile away. Why do these monkeys make such loud noises? Howler monkeys live in groups of four to eight members. Each group lives in a certain area called a territory. If one group invades another group's territory, a fight will break out. Fighting is not good for any group, so each group vocally advertises where it is so that other groups don't get too close. Why do howler monkeys howl? They howl to prevent fighting.

If you were a howler monkey, what would a typical day be like? You and your group members would wake up in a tree. Your first activity would be howling. Next you would have breakfast consisting of fruits and tender leaves. Perhaps you might feel like a mid-morning rest or maybe you would rather chase and wrestle with your group members. If you were a baby, you'd ride on your mother's back. At midday, there would be a main rest period. If it was really hot, you might sprawl out on a tree limb, letting arms and legs dangle, using your tail to keep from falling. When you got hungry in the afternoon, you would eat fruits, leaves, and perhaps some flowers and flower buds. Food is plentiful in the tropical rain forest, so you wouldn't have to travel very far.

As evening approached, it would be time for some more howling, and then you and your group would settle down for the night. Perhaps you noticed that you rested as much as 70% of the day and that your feet never once touched the ground?

If you were a howler monkey, you'd be glad that landowners in the Community Baboon Sanctuary protect you from hunters and don't cut down the tropical rain forest you need every day.

Editor's Note: Neil B. Schanker is an instructor of biology at College of the Siskiyous in Weeds, California. As a youngster, Neil began to study nature in his back yard. He learned about camping in the Boy Scouts and has explored many parts of wild America, from Maine to Arizona.
