Local man suggests alternative ways to fund new school facility

Says ideas may prove unpopular

By Leigh Stone
Managing Editor

There must be a way to update the 40-year-old Nicholas County High School and build new facilities for the junior high students without digging into taxpayers pockets.

Nicholas County resident Bill Hardin has an idea and knows it might not be popular. But he thinks the townspeople should look at various possibilities, even giving the far-fetched ideas some thought.

Hardin thinks increased tourism by way of legalized gambling would provide the funds needed to modernize the Nicholas County Schools system.

Though he realizes the local townsfolk might balk. They said when Carlisle went wet it'd go down the drain, some said toward the Halls of Hell. Well I don't know if it improved any but it sure ain't got any worse!

"Probably no one else has my opinion. We're in the Victorian age and I'm very liberal. We've gotta get moving instead of relying on taxpayers to pay for everything all the time," Hardin noted Monday afternoon while tending to customers at J & O Liquor, Carlisle, located within walking distance of the county's two school facilities, the high school and elementary school.

He offered his idea without mentioning the word "gambling" at the Nov. 26 public hearing of the Nicholas County Schools Facilities Plan. He asked Superintendent Randy Everly and the board members in the audience to contact officials of three cities, all roughly the same population as Carlisle - 1700 to 1800, and see how they had such modern schools. The towns he named were Deadwood, South Dakota, Cherokee, North Carolina, and the area near Tampa, Fla.

Hardin, retired U. S. Air Force, traveled through those towns while on duty. All had the small-time gambling for nickels and quarters, not the Las Vegas dollar slot machines. The revenue coming from sources outside the tax base of those areas put good schools there.

"The coe that gets through the gate last is on the end of everything. It's always been that way."

DEADWOOD

"I lived in this general area for eight years. It was a one horse town. About the same population as Carlisle, 1,800. If you'd watched TV last night you would have seen it on the educational channel. The only thing Deadwood had going for it is that's the place where Saloon Number 10 was where Wild Bill Hickock got killed. But the people there broadened their minds. In the early 80s Deadwood was going to the pits. They petitioned to get casino gambling legalized. I was there two years ago in the summertime. There were approximately 20 tour buses with 50 people each there and that was just one day."

CHEROKEE, N.C.

Hardin said casino gambling was approved on the Indian Reservation about two years ago and the schools are nice looking now. "Everything they have is nice, the buildings, the foothall field. But I guess people here think that idea is like everything else. The cow that gets through the gate last in on the end of everything. It's always been that way."

FLORIDA

Ocean liner gambling has made the are surrounding Tampa. "I was there last winter and there were carloads of people on these boats to gamble. The schools are better looking than anything in Kentucky, including Lexington and Louisville."

None of the locations have had legalized gambling for long. The Cherokee may have had it just a couple of years while Deadwood changed back in 1988 or 1989. The Tampa boat gambling came into being about four years ago to his recollection.

Small-scale gambling is talking a hold of other areas, even as close as Rising Sun, Indiana, which is only about two hours away from Carlisle.

"People go to Rising Sun when we should keep the money here in Nicholas County," Hardin commented.

Another town thinking of the possibilities is Sevierville, Tenn., hometown of country music singer/actress Dolly Parton. Parton had Dollywood built, but that didn't help Severeville. Hardin said the town, about as big as Cynthiana, has come up with the idea to start a theatre there. Soon, a motel will be built and more recreation, all because the town built a theatre.

"People that travel will tell you what they go to see and do. When I travel and go to a restaurant I talk to people and tell them where I'm from and ask them what they like to do on vacation. They'll tell you, 'I'm going to the casino or the riverboat and play the games.' About all you do here is be a member of a club and play cards. Why not do something to make some money, help our town and our schools?"

Gaming license did help schools

The gaming license that went into effect in Deadwood, S. C. in 1989 is helping the community's schools, but not directly.

Deadwood Mayor Barbara Allen, a Deadwood native and mayor for two years, said that Deadwood is the only city in South Dakota that has the license, and that all money, according to law, must be used for historical preservation.

"We are first and foremost a historical town. The whole town is listed in the National Register of Historic Places."

The community's six churches all received help with heating and other repair with the gaming money. Four of the six were considered historical buildings, Allen said.

"Naturally, none of them were for it, but they didn't protest a lot," Allen said.

Both Allen and Deadwood/ Lead School Superintendent Bob Stuerman said gaming had helped the schools indirectly. The school system of the two cities, Deadwood, population 1,800, and Lead, population 3,800, were combined a few years back. The towns are three miles apart.

"If it's right for you, it's right for you. It's part of Deadwood's history. It involves your feelings."

Both Allen and Stuerman said a property tax was the main help of the schools. It raised at the same time the gaming came into being. "We don't receive any money directly through the gaming proceeds. It did raise our assessed property value, giving us more taxes to draw from - it simply broadened our tax base," Stuerman explained.

However Stuerman said the main reason for new school structure in Deadwood is the fire that an eight and nine-year-old started that burned half a facility in 1985. Currently, there are 1,360 students being served. A 9-12 high school is in Lead along with a K-5 and K-3. Deadwood has grades K-5 and 6-8.

"The infrastructure, you name it, had- went to pot in Deadwood," claimed Stuerman, superintendent for 16 years. 'So the gaming license did help the town.

Both Allen and Stuerman described the area as rich in history and kragn for having just the largest gold mine in the western hemisphere, the Gold State Mines, employing 1,500 people.

Incidently, the town has been "wet," with alcohol for sale, as long as Allen can remember. "Miners used to carry it on their hip. I can't even remember this place not having bars."

Stuerman said the main casino used to be a $50,000 building, not worth $2 million since gaming. Besides gambling, the Gold Star boasts a four-star restaurant and hotel.

"It's not the total answer," Stuerman said of gaming. "But it gave us access to more revenue."

"IF YOU SMOKE PLEASE LEAVE YOUR BUTT OUTSIDE" - is just one of many sign crafts produced by Nancy Lyons, left, of Concorde Road, Carlisle, and Nancy Mattox, of Paris. The ladies give their husbands, both with the first name of Bud, credit for wood cutting and moral support. The sister-in-law get inspiration from many things and wer glad to be at Saturday's Christmas Craft Show at The Old Jail. Another popular sign "Never go faster than your guardian angel can fly."

Stanley Caswell of Kentucky Utilities had the Christmas decorations in downtown installed in time for the Thanksgiving holiday.
