COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

Other issues and needs raised by the Nicholas County participants included language barriers within the justice system, a lack of information for farm producers related to immigration regulations related to employing migrants, and a lack of labor force planning in the county as a whole...

The group then formulated a strategy to begin addressing some of these needs. Immediate actions recommended by participants included a needs assessment for migrants to clarify perceptions by the resident community of the needs of migrants...

He found that children identified by their teachers as aggressive was less effective in communicating with their peers. A video tape of the children's cooperative task, in which they interviewed peers, showed that the aggressive boys asked fewer appropriate questions during the interview, wrote less and less interest in the other child and were more apt to behave in ways that closed communication...
