Honorable mention all-conference notice went to junior wide receiver Bobby Watkins, who led 90 stats of 31 catches, 558 yards, four TD's at Altamonte Springs, FL, senior offensive tackle Roger Olden of West Wyoming, FA, senior tailback Daymon Carter of Henderson (725 yards rushing, 10 TD's), and senior defensive back Bob Head of Frankfort.

Fall fishing hot spots

Although it may be difficult to imagine, fall is just around the corner. And when the temperatures begin sliding down the thermometer and nature begins blaring with color, Kentucky's fishing gets even better.

As water temperatures begin dropping, almost all species of fish become more active. They seem to sense the impending cold weather and feed heavily in preparation of the lean weeks ahead. Lower temperatures allow fish to find their preferred comfort zone in shallow water, making fall fishing more productive than daytime summertime angling.

Beginning in September and continuing well into November, black bass may be taken in the jumps with surface lures and crank baits. A sure and more productive technique may be casting shoreline cover areas, such as submerged stump beds, stickups and fallen tree limbs.

Black bass aren't the only fish to be caught in the fall; crappie and white bass can be caught in abundance, too. During the day, schools of hungry crappie can be found in timbered coves and other submerged cover areas. At the same time, white bass can be found in jumps, on flats, submerged islands and the upper sections of embankments.

Those dedicated to seeking and catching muskie enter a highly productive period in the fall. These monster fish can be taken in certain rivers, and also Cave Run, Barkhorn and Green River Lakes. These bodies of water have become some of the most outstanding muskie lakes in the entire country. Sauger can be found below the locks and dams on the Ohio and Kentucky rivers. In western Kentucky, sauger will be abundant below the dam at the Kentucky Lake. The tailwaters of Lake Cumberland is also a hot spot for sauger in the fall.
