Fitness may be of many parts

By Betsy Kelley, P.T.
JMH Physical Therapy
When you think of physical fitness, what picture comes to mind? Sculptured weight-lifter? Long distance runner? Possibly an incredibly flexible gymnast? While each of these athletes possesses a component of fitness, none may be truly physically fit. It takes components of all three to complete the circle of fitness.

Employers should give fair treatment and raises!

I have often wondered if employers know exactly what kind of employee they have. I would like to give employees some advice on how to treat the good employee and how to treat those that do not care in the least about their job. The good employee should be treated with respect, given raises at properly given intervals and never should be treated like they are not valuable. Anyone that has had a boss or works in any type of factory should know how hard it is to keep good help. We often of the reasons why it is so hard is because the employees that don't care are being treated better than the ones that put everything into their jobs.
