Tips For Breathing Easy During Allergy Season
 Avoid common allergens. If you are allergic to shrubbery, don't eat it. If cats make you break out in hives, don't pet them or have them in your home.
 Try to avoid the outdoors on windy days or when you begin to notice symptoms. The wind often picks up pollen and carries it through the air.
 Do not cut grass or be near someone mowing his or her lawn. Mowing stirs up pollen and mold.
 Avoid high pollen exposure times at dawn and dusk.
 Keep car windows closed when you drive. It is also a good idea to use an air conditioner at home.
 Don't hang laundry out to dry because pollen and molds can collect on sheets and clothes.

Establishing and Protecting Streamside Management Zones

Kevin Galloway
 Kentucky Division of Forestry

What is a Streamside Management Zone and what is its function? As a forester, I am often asked these two questions by landowners, loggers, and students.

First, a Streamside Management Zone (SMZ) is a narrow strip of land (approximately 20-90 feet wide) that is adjacent to a stream, lake, pond, river, or creek. The area will have permanent vegetation such as trees, shrubs, or grass present. Although grass, shrubs, or trees are sometimes solely present, usually a combination of all three exist. A properly maintained SMZ will consist of two zones: the 15'-20' foot strip that borders the waterway is called the primary zone (Zone I) while the area beyond 20 feet is referred to as the secondary zone (Zone II). These two zones will be discussed in greater detail in the following paragraphs.

Since it is a natural buffer, it protects the adjacent waterway. The buffer zone retards streambank erosion, filters pollutants (i.e. sediment, nutrients, pesticides, and debris) and helps to maintain desirable water temperatures when trees are present. Hence water quality improves, plant and animal diversity increases, and collectively a healthier watershed is attained.

Now that a SMZ has been defined and its function explained, how should this area be managed? Ideally, Zone I of an SMZ should not be disturbed. Full compliance of the Best Management Practices (BMP) guidelines suggest that no tree removal or

This publication is an educational tool from a partnership effort of local groups that focus on two specific topics that help maintain and promote healthy water quality conditions. These two topics involve streamside forests and the care and maintenance of septic systems. Maintaining and creating streamside forests and properly caring for septic systems will help maintain good water quality.
