Opportunity for all is what Millersburg Military Institute is about. This co-educational campus achieved an 18th beautiful measured acres in Central Kentucky has provided a solid education since 1893.

New, with new commandant Major Roy Berwick, wife Janice and daughter Meredith, 15, on campus, the school is about to take a hard turn toward increased enrollment.

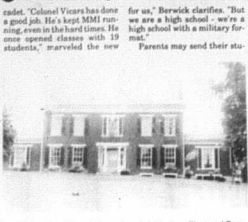

"We can take an under-achiever and make them an overachiever. I'm living and breathing proof," states Major Berwick. "I never knew a weak student in public school."

The man claims he was an underachiever himself, bored with public school. He took a military school to turn him to ward academics and in addition to take a hard turn toward increased enrollment.

In charge of cadets, there were 67 last year. The major's new goal is 100. An active recruitment effort is soon to be launched with "fund-raising" instead of "fund-raising" being the main idea, Berwick suggests.

Registration is Sunday, Aug. 24 with first day of classes Aug. 25.

It has a history of successful cadets, with one in particular Berwick credits with keeping the theme here: Col James M. Varnas was once an MMI cadet.

Historic Allen House is home for administrative offices and Commandant Roy Berwick, wife Janice and daughter Meredith, 15. The school has been listed on the National Register of Historic Places since 1966.

"This place is perfect. It's small. A place where you can make a difference," Berwick claims mentioning the faculty of eight teachers, bound to a curriculum fitted individually to students. Curriculum's not managed by the state, since state funding doesn't flow toward MMI. If it did, the institute would be like any other high school in Kentucky, and would have to adhere to the rules of KERA. "Not that there's anything wrong with KERA, but we're teaching with KERA, but we're taking the basics and that works."

night Bings provides some funding. It makes the community feel like a part of MMI, which Berwick certainly supports. "The bingie money provides scholarships and has helped when we needed it," he said.

WISH LIST Besides increased enrollment, the commandant has a wish list for MMI. He hopes to contact graduates about showing support and his plan revolves around "fund-raising" instead of "fund-raising." "I want to put my hands on their hearts" (rather than directly in their wallets) claimed the cadet supervisor.

As he looked at the deep green football field where UK football coach Bear Bryant was reported to bring his team here to practice, Berwick then to the tennis court in ill-repair. Berwick would like to see the tennis court repaired. And someday a swimming pool built.

MMI History 6 Goals

Millersburg Military Institute was established in 1993. It is an independent, college preparatory, co-educational day and boarding school accommodating grades six through 12. Its location is 14 miles north of Lexington and 65 miles south of Cincinnati, Ohio. MMI is accredited by the Southern Association of College and Schools (SACS) and is also a member of the National Association of Military Colleges and Schools, the Association of Independent Schools and Association for Academic Standards and Guidance. The school offers a small student to teacher ratio of less than 10:1 requires with 67 cadets. Gamble Hall seats up to 180 students at meals. Its lower level provides library, Miller Hall accommodates male cadets. Memorial Gymnasium serves as a home for physical education, basketball games, bingie fund raisers and military classrooms. Historical Allen House, built in 1851, houses the administrative offices and the President's quarters. The 1993 handbook states, "Adherence to duty, honor, country, and the pursuit of religious persuasion, respect for life and others, and preparation for responsible adulthood are the qualities we seek to instill in every MMI cadet."

MMI currently offers its own leadership training. Really, what we want is for students to learn responsibility, to learn responsibility for themselves but also for others. We want to instill values and the traditions of American society."

MMI for $10,400 a year, with at least 60 percent required up front. That a bargain because most military schools," confirms Berwick. "Most schools require $10,000 to $16,000 a year."

The school includes laundry by Miss May. Each cadet's clothing is done individually, Berwick said with pride. Parents may send an allowance.

What someone gets for their money is a well-rounded, disciplined student, ready for the world and most certainly, college. The small student-teacher ratio means a student gets individual training where and when needed.

Berwick acquiesces to the discipline of military training but claims MMI isn't about producing soldiers. In fact, no longer affiliated with ROTC, MMI currently offers its own leadership training. Really, what we want is for students to learn responsibility, to learn responsibility for themselves but also for others. We want to instill values and the traditions of American society."
