USDA leaves legacy for 1997

WASHINGTON - The U. S. Department of Agriculture today issued a "rural report card" to the nation, summarizing the impact on rural development's programs during fiscal year 1997.

Jill Long Thompson, under secretary for USDA Rural Development mission area, cited major gains in the areas of rural home ownership, community facilities construction, business development and the expansion of rural water and utility services as evidence of the Clinton-Gore Administration's commitment to improving the quality of life in rural America.

"More than 150,000 rural jobs were created or preserved and more than 40,000 single family homes were purchased by rural Americans during 1997 thanks to USDA Rural Development programs," Long Thomson said. "We also made major gains in expanding telecommunications and other utility services rural Americans will need to be competitive in the 21st century.

Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman said the effectiveness of USDA Rural Development programs are being magnified by working in partnership with other public and private entities. "USDA has been able to improve the lives of many more rural residents and the communities in which they live by working in tandem with state and local governments and with private enterprise," Glickman said.

Courthouse restoration project reaches conclusion this month

By Leigh Stone
Managing Editor

The wrap-up of the restoration of Nicholas County Courthouse is near.

Jack McGraw, supervisor of General Restoration, said Tuesday afternoon, "We're 99 percent done. We may be here another week."

The Columbus, Ohio, company began work on the 100-year-old courthouse July 8.

So far, the brick has been cleaned, a new copper dome installed, the clock refurbished, the American lighted Flag refurbished and reinstalled in the dome. Now, the workers are putting the finishing touches on the basement windows, doing some trim on the inside, and basically waiting on four new windows to arrive for installation. Also, one change order of late, new roofs will be put on the two corner towers, described as "not a huge job."

"We spent a lot of money here. And, we bought all our paint, lumber and hardware locally."

Jack McGraw
supervisor

McGraw said the company is looking at its next job in either a church at Bexley, Ohio or a courthouse at Adrian, Michigan.

As for their stay in Carlisle, some stayed at a nearby trailer park. Some stayed at Howard Johnson's in Paris.

"We spent a lot of money here. And, we bought all our paint, lumber and hardware locally. One thing I'll miss is the restaurant next door (Garrett's). I've gained 12 lbs."

Worker Larry Starner agreed with McGraw about being proud of their work. He also praised local folks for the pride they had in their courthouse. Vandalism was at an all-time low for such a project, Starner said. "We've been in some towns we had to be more careful."

McGraw said he's most proud of the new tower. "It looks brand new with steel inside. The windows are the toughest item, which we knew going in."

The workers will go home for Thanksgiving and return after this Monday or tuesday depending on the weather, to conclude the work.

This is a closer view of the electrically operated brass striking hammer on the courthouse bell.

Book details history of Park Lake in Fleming

Rowan County was once a part of Fleming County and as Fleming County begins the celebration of its 200th birthday, the Park Lake Outing Association is publishing a history of Park Lake.

The site has been designated a Kentucky Landmark by the Kentucky Heritage Council.

Many Morehead families were active members of Park Lake Outing Association, including Charles Duley, whose father, Hiram Duley, built one of the first cottages about 1909 and it remained in the family until 1981.

When Charles Duley moved to Morehead in the 1920s, he promoted Park Lake as a family recreation area resulting in over 20 families becoming active members, many taking leadership roles, such as Hartley Batts, M.C. Crosley and Alpha Hutchison.

Every member of the Association throughout the century, including names from Fleming, Mason, Rowan, Nicholas and other counties and states are listed in the appendix.

When Lake Luman in Rowan County became a reality, Alpha Hutchison, John Bay and others became active in that lake, bringing knowledge from their association with Park Lake.

The writing of the book is complete and is now in the final stages of printing. The book was written by Gladys Evans McCartney, Park Lake historian and John Klee, professor of history at the University of Kentucky, Maysville Community College.

The book will be hard cover, 160 pages with 100 pictures, and contains a general history of Park Lake and stories contributed by many people. Excerpts from the book are:

...turn of the century America was obviously a different place... the abundant game that made Kentucky a hunters paradise had gone the way of the Buffalo... In this environment, six men lamented the distance and the expense of a hunting and fishing outing... The this group of men were determined to build a lake, primarily for fishing but also so they could take their families with them... to avoid being "selfish".

By Sept. 1, 1904, the Association took possession of 47.5 acres from W. H. Means and E.P. Browning... Fleming County's population in 1904 surpassed its total today... By 1906, the dam was completed enough to hold water, and the call went out for fish to stock the lake.

Pre-publication orders for the book are now being taken. There will be 500 copies printed of which one-half are committed. The pre-publication price is $20 plus $2.50 for shipping and handling. Orders may be placed by calling 1-800-833-8672.

Ingenious Ideas

Horses Can Help You Heal

(NAPS)—Sometimes, all it takes is a little horsing around to help us learn about trust, bonding, creativity and spirituality.

Just ask the writers of a new book based on what horses can teach us.

Therapists Adele von Rust McCormick and Marlena Deborah McCormick share with readers the miraculous healing that can result when human beings and horses come together.

Through extensive research and case studies, they've discovered that the answer to some people's problems may not lie in the psychiatric clinic, but instead in the stable.

The McCormicks tell an engrossing tale of how horses became their partners in the therapeutic process. Lively case histories bring to life the principles they discovered as the horses became both healers and teachers.

Amazingly intuitive and responsive, these four-legged creatures helped people learn about themselves and their needs.

The book, Horse Sense and the Human Heart, (Health Communications, Inc., $10.95 paperback) can be a great gift for yourself, someone you know looking for guidance or any animal lover.

The authors, both Ph.Ds, have been psychotherapists for more than 30 years and have been designing and running a series of innovative programs for the mentally ill, criminals, drug and alcohol abusers and troubled young people.

Their book is available at most bookstores or by calling (800) 441-5569.
