

National Farm Safety Week is Sept. 21-27; this year's theme is about children's safety

By John Mack Hawk County Extension Agent 4-H Youth Development

It is impossible to know the exact number of children who are seriously injured or killed on farms each year...

danger. First, it is helpful to know what types of injuries occur most frequently to children in our local region...

Here in Nicholas County, farmers and parents should be particularly aware of potential safety hazards involving tractors, PTOs, hay balers, bush hogs, mowers, plows, discs and other implements...

Once adults are aware of the primary agents of injury, decisions could be made regarding the appropriate use of having children watch or participate in the work environment...

In addition to safety education, specific steps can be taken to minimize risk of agricultural disease and injury to children...

During National Farm Safety Week Sept. 21-27, the Nicholas County Cooperative Extension Service will offer you that in order for a farm to be a safe place for a visitor to live and visit, the farm must be a safe environment for adults...

When assessing when and where a child should be present, the owner/operator and parent should consider the fact that farming is one of the most hazardous occupations in the U.S. Farms hold dangers comparable to construction sites and mines...

For every hazard present on a farm, there should be a barrier to protect children from the procedure when going home...
