learning institutions.

Last year, about 80 participants attended.

"They will give information regarding financial aid and registration among many other things," Lally said.

"A big part of career counseling is to work with seniors who want to apply for college," he said. "I would like to try to increase the percentage of students in Nicholas County who want to go to college."

In the spring, he hopes to host a career day and invite different businesses and factories to set up booths and explain what they do.

Lally will help with new student orientation and immunization records.

He also works with the school social worker and family resource centers on difficult problems.

"I have enjoyed my job in special education and am looking forward to counseling."

Lally counseled part-time last year along with other teaching duties.

"I have had a master's degree in counseling from Morehead State University since 1990. I didn't know if I was going to have the opportunity to use it.

"Counseling is not far from special education, in that both deal with learning problems. But in counseling, I'll be operating at both ends of the spectrum, from special needs for students with problems to valedictorians to want to apply for college," Lally said.

Lally lives in Mt. Olivet. He has two grown sons. Josh studied nuclear medicine and performs MRIs and Seth is attending the University of Kentucky this year after graduating Maysville Community College.

Grass Clipping Sheik?

(NAPS)—Oil imports have reached historic heights. Farm income is at risk. Global warming threatens our climate.

Biomass has the answers. Biomass is stored solar energy, a sustainable renewable resource that can be made into ethanol or used as a fuel for producing electric power—produced by trees and grasses, as well as paper trash and yard clippings.

The US has enough agricultural land available to regularly produce biomass which can replace half our gasoline usage, or our nuclear power twice over. This will allow us to keep part of the $50 billion a year we now spend on imported oil at home.

KENTUCKY DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Kentucky Afield

Have you seen a black bear?

If you've seen a bear in Kentucky in 1998, you're one of a special few. However, bear sightings are becoming more frequent. While there are no solid estimates, the black bear population in Kentucky has been making a comeback in the last 10 years, according to wildlife biologist Steve Bonney.

"Bear reports have been received this spring and summer in greater numbers than I can ever recall," says Bonney.

Over the July fourth holiday weekend, the fish and wildlife department received at least three different bear-related calls. Two black bears have already been killed this year - largely due to lack of understanding of officials.

Bears are dormant during the winter and do not eat. When temperatures warm up, bears become more active and begin foraging for food. This period of activity is when humans begin to see bears more frequently.

This past year's mast crop, of acorns, beechnuts and other forest food sources, was poor. As a result, bears wandered in search of food and found sources such as garbage and dog food.

"Bears are just looking for the easiest meal they can find to make up for the poor mast crop," Bonney explains. Open garbage cans, trash that is easily accessible and dog food left outside provides just such a meal for a hungry black bear. This is where the human/wildlife conflict comes into play.

When humans and bears come into contact, the human usually reacts in one of two extremes. Either they are intensely afraid or they want to treat it as a Teddy bear. Neither one of these reactions is advised, says Bonney.

"Black bears are generally docile animals," says Bonney, "and will run at the sight of a human." Even the old belief about a mother bear protecting her cubs may be inaccurate when it comes to black bears.

People usually have two questions when it comes to bears. The first is: "Is it going to eat my children?" The second question is: "Can I shoot it?" No, it's not going to eat your children and, short of immediate physical injury, do not shoot a bear, it is against the law.

Bonney advises people to treat bears with respect. If you see a bear in your yard, especially at night, just wait. It will go away. If it is rummaging through your trash can, the same rule applies. If left alone, a bear will go away. You may try hurrying it on its way by yelling, banging pots, early morning or bright lights, but do not go near the bear.

Finally, enjoy the unique experience of seeing a bear, but don't encourage its visit. Keep garbage and dog food out of range of bears, especially at night and store it in a bear-proof container. Never feed bears. Feeding will make a bear used to people and can make it dangerous to itself and to humans.

Renovation project dedicated at JMHC

The latest renovation project for Johnson Mathers Health Care was dedicated in a special ceremony on July 26.

More than 100 people gathered outside the entrance for the public ceremony.

Dr. Rice C. Creech, commissioner of the Kentucky Department of Public Health, was the keynote speaker.

Creech congratulated the JMHC administration and staff for their efforts in facility improvements and expansion and for continuing to provide quality health care to Nicholas County residents.

Following opening remarks by JMHC administrator Doris Ecton and Creech, an official ribbon cutting was held.

An Open House with tours and refreshments concluded the event.

The renovation project just completed added seven beds to the nursing home. The health care facility now has the capacity for 104 residents and 18 hospital patients.

Six of the hospital beds are "swing beds," which can be used for acute care patients, skilled nursing facility patients or nursing home residents, as determined by need.

The renovation also included renovation of the health care facility's administrative office and the Corner Boutique, the auxiliary-operated gift shop, and expansion of the Rehabilitation Services Department.

Johnson Mathers Nursing Home was established in 1965. In the early 1970s, Nicholas County Hospital and Johnson Mathers Nursing Home were merged and incorporated into what is known as Johnson Mathers Health Care.
