Now's the time to prepare for coming winter weather

Temperatures are dropping, but before they drop too far, now is the time to make sure you — and any older folks you care about — are prepared for the cold weather that's just around the corner.

"As winter approaches, we all need to take precautions like making sure our heater is working properly and that we have some supplies in the pantry, but it's especially imperative for older folk," said Nancy Stiles, University of Kentucky geriatrician and assistant professor of medicine in the UK College of Medicine.

Seniors tend to be at greater risk for cold-related injuries, especially because many of them are on medications that may have a sedative effect. Also, dementia or psychiatric illnesses may impair their reasoning ability. Older people also tend to be more likely to suffer falls, or fall victim to viruses.

A first step in preparing for cold weather is to get your wardrobe ready and pay attention to weather forecasts, Stiles said, especially taking note when the temperatures are going to dip below freezing. Dressing in layers, including long underwear, will help you stay comfortable and well-protected from the elements, she said.

Shoes are designed for treacherous sidewalks, a good snow-shovel, and kitty litter or gravel for traction also are good to have on hand. But, if it's cold and precipitating, think twice about going out at all. If you must go out, make sure someone is around to rescue you if needed.

"That could just mean calling a neighbor and asking her or him to look out the window to make sure you make it to the car safely," Stiles said.

Stock up on supplies, such as a week's worth of nonperishable food, bottled water and prescriptions, as well as over-the-counter medications.

"Take stock of your medicine cabinet, and make sure you have the basics on hand, such as acetaminophen and cold medicines," Stiles said. "Also, don't wait until your almost out of your prescription medications to get them refilled."

Stiles offered other winter survival tips that could apply to anyone — but are especially true for seniors:

- Wearing sunglasses, even in winter, can help prevent cataracts.
- When shoveling snow, be careful not to overdo it, keeping in mind that it's vigorous exercise.
- Get a flu shot.

Outlet mall

Dahlstrom, a UK marketing professor who keeps his eye on retail activity.

Dahlstrom attributes the retailers' price cutting to "a little bit too much retail out there. There's too much competition for the dollar, so you have a lot more competitive pricing than you did before."

Long-established retailers are battling with new stores, including discount warehouse-style stores offering wide ranges of product selections. They also must fight to keep customers from turning to shops in outlet malls, Dahlstrom said.

And then there's a new source of competition, the Internet.

Dahlstrom noted shoppers can sit at home computers and search for a wide variety of products available from businessed with sites on the World Wide Web — among them, books, music CDs, computers, stereos, televisions and any number of items.

"Almost anything you can buy in a store, you can get on the Internet," Dahlstrom said.

"Some people are going to buy on the Internet because of the convenience. The Internet replicated what had been available before only through the direct-mail market," he said.

One area of retailing that may be less effective is clothing. Many people will continue to want to try on clothes and study fabrics before making a purchase. "This is more likely to continue to attract people into a store," Dahlstrom said.

But even clothiers are feeling an impact from today's new competitive marketplace.

"Direct-mail outlets, like Land's End and L.L. Bean, are appealing to people who don't have time to go out and shop for their clothes. And these outlets have good return policies for their products," Dahlstrom said.

The whole situation — the explosion of discounters and outlet malls, the Internet, direct-mail outlets and other factors — is creating a new philosophy of shopping, among both consumers and retailers.

"Consumers can be a lot more choosy now, with the options provided by discount stores, normal retailers and the Internet. It forces the retailer to be a lot more competitive," Dahlstrom said.

"That means good news for consumers this season," he said.
