Burley program deadline April 1

A financial assistance program for burley tobacco growers is expanding to enable more farmers to use mechanical harvesting machines, the Farm Income Improvement Foundation has announced.

In its second year, the foundation uses grant money from corporate donors to help burley growers resolve production problems. For the 1998 growing season, growers throughout the eight-state production belt can apply for the following:

- Up to $7,500 for buying or leasing a Powell Tobacco Harvester.
- Up to $1,500 for buying or leasing a 4-Star Tobacco Harvester.
- Up to $300 for purchasing a stripping wheel.
- Up to $150, or 50 percent of the cost, for purchasing a kit and/or recommended pump to equip a sprayer for proper application of fungicides for the prevention of the blue mold disease.

Applications are available at county Farm Bureau offices. Applications for the harvester grants must be postmarked by April 1, while those for the stripping wheels and blue mold kits must be postmarked by May 1.

Eaglin blasts 'matching funds' rule

Morehead State President Ronald Eaglin blasted a Council for Postsecondary Education (CPE) plan to pipeonbole across to more than $800,000 earmarked for MSU, by requiring matching funds.

Eaglin told the board of regents on Friday that the state legislature never intended the Incentive Funding Program last year — two funds which earmark a total $865,000 in funds for improving MSU.

The two funds are among those in the Regional University Excellence Trust fund set up by the state legislature.

The CPE decided they wanted to leverage these funds," Eaglin said, imposing a 1:1 match to get them. "There is nothing in the legislation to establish these matches. It was never the intention that these funds be placed out of reach of the institutions."

"It was not the intent of the law," he added. "These matches are wrong and need to be changed." He added that at least one other university president tried to dissuade Eaglin from vocally opposing the CPE decision.

"The CPE knows where I personally stand," he said. "If necessary, I will try to seek legal support from the legislature."

Eaglin added he would also fight to change the match ratio to $1 from MSU for every $4 in the funds, if getting rid of the matching is unsuccessful.

"Our chances of getting that $800,000 are minuscule with all the other financial burdens placed on them," Eaglin said. "I'm going to work as hard as I can to change these rations."

Eaglin and several regents also questioned where the funds would eventually go, if left in the fund.

"If we can't access these funds, who gets them?" asked Regent Helen Pennington. "Where is the interest on those funds?"

The regents unanimously approved a motion by Regent James Finch, for a resolution in support of Eaglin's stand, and calling for a more equitable distribution of the funds.

Fiscal court adopts senior center budget

The Nicholas County Fiscal Court adopted a budget for the Senior Citizens Center during a special meeting, held Friday, Feb. 19.

Judge rules state may pursue death penalty

The death penalty will not be ruled out as possible punishment for a man accused of murdering a Mt. Sterling doctor nearly two years ago.

Public advocacy attorneys Hugh Convery and Dale Horner, who represent defendant Steven Graham, were recently denied a request in Montgomery Circuit Court that the death penalty be ruled out as a possible sentence when the trial begins March 2 in the murder of Dr. John Elswick.

Judge William Mains heard arguments from the defense and the prosecution on Feb. 2 before making his decision on declining to rule out the death penalty.

Commonwealth Attorney George Moore said the court should not rule out the possibility of the death penalty because the motive in the killing might have been monetary gain, causing it to be a capital case.

If it is a case of murder for financial gain, the burden lies with the prosecution to prove the crime was committed for monetary value by the alleged murderer or the alleged accomplice.

Graham's attorneys argued that the state's position of murder for profit was unfounded because, they said, Graham did not receive money for his alleged actions.

Mains ruled that the death penalty could still be considered in the murder of Dr. John Elswick.

During his testimony, Shortridge said that Elswick's estate was worth over $1.5 million. He added that during his investigation, Elswick's wife, Robin, had tried to purchase extra life insurance coverage for the doctor less than two weeks before his death.

Both Graham and Robin Elswick were originally charged with the murder.

Older Americans Act—Not Moving Right Along

By Martha A. McSteen

(NAPS)—Time is running out for the Older Americans Act. If it doesn't get reauthorized soon, a number of its funding-starved programs may simply expire.

For two years, the Older Americans Act—which provides important community-based services to seniors—has limped along under an expired authorization because efforts to reauthorize it have been caught up on thorny issues.

McSteen

Meanwhile, Congress has barely sustained Older American Act programs with insufficient and temporary funding that amounts to starvation rations.

"Current reauthorization efforts by the 105th Congress are proceeding at a snail's pace," warns National Committee Government Relations and Policy Director Cheryl Gannon. "Older Americans Act programs are extremely vital but Congress is dragging its feet."

Reauthorization is one of two legislative processes that drive the future of the Older Americans Act. Authorization allows the program to exist, while appropriations gives the program money.

Since 1980, there has been a 40 percent loss in the Program's capacity to provide services at the state and local levels. State funding comes at a time when the number of seniors is growing and those with the greatest needs—those over age 85—comprise the fastest growing segment of the country's population. The need for programs to service seniors is critical.

You can learn more about this subject and about other issues of concern to older Americans by calling the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare—the nation's second largest senior education and advocacy organization created to improve retirement income and health care for seniors—at 1-800-966-1935.
