Media General to sell Kentucky newspapers

Media General, Inc. has announced it intends to sell its Kentucky newspaper properties which include The Carlisle Mercury.

"Although the Kentucky publications are good ones, they are small in size," said J. Stewart Bryan III, chairman and CEO of Media General. "We believe in the concept of clustering our weekly and daily papers, and we were not able to purchase other papers nearby," Bryan said.

Other Kentucky newspapers owned by Media General include The (Somerset) Daily Commonwealth Journal and related weekly publications.

Those include newspapers in Morehead, Grayson, Olive Hill, Greenup, London, Russellville and Leitchfield and McCreary and Menifee counties.

Media General did not disclose a schedule for the sale of the Kentucky newspapers.

Media General announced Friday that the company has reached an agreement in principal to acquire the assets of The Hickory (N.C.) Daily Record from the Millholland family of Hickory.

The transaction is subject to regulatory approval and is expected to close later this year. Terms were not disclosed.

The Hickory Daily Record has circulation of approximately 20,000 both daily and Sunday, and augments Media General's presence in northwestern North Carolina, where it already owns a daily and weekly newspapers with 159,000 daily and more than 160,000 weekly circulation.

1860. Fort Sumter was a five-sided bricked fort and each wall was about 48 feet high. The fort was on a man-made island, and seemed to rise out of the water. The fort could only be attacked by gun fire or by ships. Fort Sumter is where the Civil War first began.

In 1860, South Carolina withdrew from the Union and prepared to capture the forts in the harbor at Charleston, S.C. Major Robert Anderson, leader of the Union forces at Charleston, moved his small group of troops from Fort Moultrine to Fort Sumter. He knew it would be difficult to defend his position from the Confederates at Fort Moultrine.

South Carlolina demanded that the United States government let it take over Fort Sumter, President James Buchanan refused this request, so the Confederates cut off Fort Sumter's supplies so they would surrender. The Confederates were under the command of General Pierre Beauregard at that time.

On Jan. 9, 1861, the Union Merchant Vessel, Star of the West, tried to send supplies and reinforcements to Fort Sumter but they were attacked by the Confederates.

On March 1, 1861, Abraham Lincoln became the 16th president of the United States. He said he was going to send supplies to the troops at the fort.

On April 11, 1861, General Pierre Beauregard told Major Robert Anderson to surrender the fort. Anderson had only a few men and almost no food or ammunition left. He still refused to surrender.

On March 4, six more states withdrew from the Union and Fort Sumter was one of the two southern forts that were still under the Union control.

On April 12 at 4:30 a.m., Major Robert Anderson and his troops fired back. The Confederate forces opened fire from all sides.

The battle lasted for 34 hours and was called the Bombardment of Fort Sumter. It marked the beginning of the Civil War.

Finally the Union troops ran out of ammunition and had to surrender. The Confederates allowed Anderson and his mother to take their weapons and flag with them. Lincoln sent more troops to help, but they could not enter because there was too much cannon fire from the shore. Neither side suffered any deaths.

Then, on the following day, the United States declared war on the Confederacy. The Confederates took over Fort Sumter and made it even better and stronger by fixing the barracks and repairing all the damage that had been done to it.

In 1863-1864, the Union tried to get the fort back by attacking it with several large attacks. One of the attacks was on April 7, 1863, when nine Union warships attacked the fort with their guns. The firing lasted two hours and twenty minutes. Fort Sumter's walls were damaged but the attack failed.

The Confederates won by sinking one of the ships and damaging the five others. The Union troops did not give up. In August, 1863, the Union set up a battery of rifled cannons like the one that was used to conquer Fort Pulaski. They put the same man, William Tecumseh Sherman, in charge and provided him with better and more numerous guns.

While the Union was getting ready to attack, the Confederates were getting ready to defend it.

First, the Confederates filled the casemates with sand and cotton bales. That helped make the wall solid. Then they put more cotton, sand and dirt in the walls.

When the Union attacked, as fast as they could knock down a portion of the wall, the Confederates built it back up again.

For 22 months, Sumter withstood the attacks the Union made upon it.

The Federal cannons shot more than 3,500 tons of ammunition into it.

The Confederates finally evacuated the fort on February 18, 1865.

Since 1948, there has been a national monument at the site of Fort Sumter.

THE WILL OF GOD

All my life I have heard people use the phrase "It's God's will" to describe every imaginable activity. That statement is made whenever an event happens that is beyond our ability to understand, or when answers are hard to come by, or when someone is trying to lend a comforting word. It seems that many well meaning people are under the impression that everything that happens is the "will of God."

By this way of thinking the will of God is not so much something a person tries to do, but it is some inflexible, irresistable force that controls everything that happens, both good and bad. During the funeral message for the three slain Paducah high school students shot to death during their morning prayer time a minister said, "They were exactly where they were supposed to be. They could have been nowhere else." In other words, "Their deaths were the will of God.

As soothing as it may be for us to explain things that are beyond our understanding as being the will of God, the truth is that many things happen in this life that are the result of people living outside the will of God. When that young man broke into a home, stole a gun, and fired bullets into a group of classmates he made a choice to do something that was outside the will of God. He chose to ignore the commandment of God that says, "Thou shalt not kill."

To suggest that things happen that are not God's will is troubling for some. This view seems to render God powerless, limited, and not in control of the very world he created. I submit to you that God is not powerless when people make bad choices. Rather these things change the way God's power is used.

The Bible says, "And we know that in all things God works for the good of those who love him, who have been called according to his purpose." (Romans 8:28NIV) This verse does not say that God causes all things to happen so that he can bring about some good. It says that in everything that happens, God isprresent and using his power to work for good. Further, it says that we have been called according to his purpose.

God's will is not an irresistable force, but rather, it is something that we are called to seek, to know, and to do. We ask, "Is that God's will?" A better question is "What is God's purpose?" When we try to understand God's purpose in our world we are then able to know and do the will of God. The will of God requires our faithful action, not our passive acceptance of things that cannot be explained.

We need look no further than the life of Jesus for help in this matter. Jesus was the ultimate revelation of God. He said, "Anyone who has seen me has seen the Father...It is the Father, living in me, who is doing this work". (John 14:9-10) What did Jesus do? Did he go around causing bad things to happen to people? Did he ever afflict anyone with a disease or a tragic event or even death? Absolutely not!

Jesus used the power of God to bring good into the lives of those who were sick, to comfort those in the midst of tragedy, and to give life to the dead. Jesus said, "My purpose is to the will of him who sent me and to finish his work." (John 4:34)

We would do well to follow the example of Christ who did not understand the will of God as a force that explained why things are the way they are. Jesus understood the will of God as his calling and his purpose. May God bless you as you live out your calling to do the will of God.
